Construction Industry Training Board

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what date the Construction Industry Training Board will be transferred to a non-statutory basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The White Paper, "Employment for the 1990s", makes clear that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment will be consulting the Construction Industry Training Board and organisations representing employers in the construction industry with a view to drawing up a programme and timetable to manage the transition to a non-statutory basis. Those consultations will begin in the new year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disabled People

5. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 to be fully implemented.

28. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 to be fully implemented.

41. Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 to be fully implemented.

50. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 to be fully implemented.

Mr. Scott: We are making good progress on implementing the Act. Six key sections are now in force. The remaining sections will be implemented as and when the resources required are identified and made available. We have agreed with local authorities that the next priority is section 7, and we are discussing its resource implications.

19. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes in benefits to aid disabled people he is planning, in the light of the recent findings of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and the Social Security Advisory Committee report.

42. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes in benefits to aid disabled people he is planning, in the light of the recent findings of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and the Social Security Advisory Committee report.

48. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes in benefits to aid disabled people he is planning in the light of the recent findings of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and the Social Security Advisory Committee report.

51. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will implement the proposals made by the Social Security Advisory Committee regarding disabled persons.

61. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes in benefits to aid disabled people he is planning, in the light of the recent findings of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and the Social Security Advisory Committee's report.

62. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking in regard to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' report on the financial circumstances of disabled people.

Mr. Scott: In the period up to July 1989 the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys is publishing a series of reports on the findings of the surveys of disability in Great Britain carved out between 1985 and 1988. Two reports have already been published covering the prevalence of disability amongst adults and the financial circumstances of disabled adults in private households. Four more reports will follow. Taken together, the six reports will bring together the most comprehensive and detailed information ever collected about disabled people in this country.

On 29 November the Social Security Advisory Committee published a report, "Benefits for Disabled People: a Strategy for Change". In publishing the report the committee's chairman, Peter Barclay, recognised that the Government would need to wait until all the OPCS data were available before reaching any conclusions on whether there are better ways of providing help for disabled people. In examining the OPCS findings we will give careful consideration to the recommendations made in the SSAC report.

49. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much Government expenditure on the disabled has increased since 1979.

Mr. Scott: Expenditure on benefits for the long-term sick and disabled has increased from £2·1 billion in 1979-80 to £7·3 billion this year. This is an increase of £3·5 billion (or 90 per cent.) in real terms.

Independent Living Fund

11. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications have been received by the independent living fund; how many persons have received assistance; and what is the total amount so far paid out by the fund.

44. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications have been received by the independent living fund; how many persons have received assistance; and what is the total amount so far paid out by the fund.

52. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications have been received by the independent living fund; how many persons have received assistance; and what is the total amount so far paid out by the fund.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for payments from the independent living fund have been received.

Mr. Scott: As of 30 November 1988, the fund had received 2,502 applications. A total of 354 people have received assistance and 1,574 further cases are still under consideration. In all, the fund has paid out around £125,000.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many discretionary payments are being made in one month from the independent living fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I understand that the independent living fund does not compile statistics on the number of discretionary awards—that is awards where the applicant does not fulfil the fund's eligibility criteria and the trustees are required to exercise their discretion.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are in receipt of regular payments from the independent living fund, at the latest available date.

Mr. Scott: Latest estimates are that some 340 to 345 applicants to the fund are receiving regular payments, or have received offers of regular payment conditional upon their receiving the care proposed in their applications.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to publicise the independent living fund.

Mr. Scott: Publicity for the independent living fund is a matter for the trustees, but I understand that 16,000 posters and 55,000 leaflets have been produced by the ILF, for distribution to directors of social services, health authorities, voluntary organisations, and so on.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for payments from the independent living fund have been refused.

Mr. Scott: As of 30 November 1988, 574 applications had been unsuccessful.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the £5 million allocated for the independent living fund is being spent on administration costs.

Mr. Scott: Projections of expenditure during the current year suggest that, of the total spent by the independent living fund, around 10 per cent. will be on administration.

Family Credit

12. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects there to be a 100 per cent. take-up of family credit.

23. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects there to be a 100 per cent. take-up of family credit.

34. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects there to be a 100 per cent. take-up of family credit.

56. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects there to be a 100 per cent. take-up of family credit.

Mr. Moore: There are two ways in which it is helpful to measure take-up. One is to count the number of recipients; the other is to look at expenditure. So far as recipients are concerned, we expect to do better than the 50 per cent. take-up eventually achieved by family income supplement. Expenditure is already running at slightly more that we estimated, which suggests that families with higher levels of entitlement are coming forward to make their claims. Experience indicates that even with universal benefits it is not realistic to expect all eligible people to claim.

24. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest estimate on the take-up of family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Members for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) and for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) earlier today.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will urgently take steps to simplify and reduce family credit application forms;

(2) what consideration he is giving to complaints about the size and complication of the family credit application forms.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are looking at ways of improving form FC1 and expect to bring a revised version into use in the spring.

Family Credit and Independent Living Fund

13. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what funds he is providing to publicise the existence of (a) family credit and (b) the independent living fund.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: For family credit, the advertising budget is over £3 million in the current financial year. The allocation of funds for publicity for the independent living fund is a matter for the trustees of the fund. The Department will, of course, continue to give the trustees such technical and professional advice and assistance as they require.

Income Support

15. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate for the full annual cost of income support payments to residents in private aged persons' homes.

Mr. Scott: In May 1988, the annual income support expenditure on people in independent residential care and nursing homes as a whole in Great Britain was estimated to be £878 million.

16. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to further increase income support limits for those in residential care and nursing homes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend announced on 27 October significant increase in the income support limits for people in residential care homes and nursing homes. These will come into force as part of the general uprating of social security benefits in April 1989.

66. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has so far been spent in special grants to people on income support; what was the comparable figure a year ago; who the main beneficiaries have been and for what reasons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Provisional figures for the period 11 April to 30 October 1988 for social fund budgeting and crisis loans and community care grants are as follows:

	Budgeting and crisis loans £ million	Community care grants £ million
Expenditure 11 April 1988 to 30 October 1988	61	15
Main beneficiary group percentage of expenditure
Pensioners	4	14
Disabled	9	13
Unemployed	39	25
Lone parents	40	36
Others	8	12
Main purpose of award percentage of expenditure
Furniture-household-equipment-washing machines-bedding	77	81
Home improvement-repairs-maintenance-redecoration	3	3
Removal expenses	1	3
Rent in advance	1	0
Travelling expenses	0	5
Clothing and footwear	5	6
HP and other debts	1	0
Living expenses	10	0

Note: Percentages of less than 0·5 per cent. are shown as 0.

Directly comparable figures for the same period in 1987, before the social fund started, are not available. However expenditure on supplementary benefits single payments in the period 8 April to 26 October 1987 was £100 milion, which was distributed as follows:

Beneficiary group	Percentage of expenditure
Supplementary pension (P)	44
Supplementary allowance (unemployed) (E)	45
Supplementary allowance (other) (A)	10

Housing Benefit

17. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of housing benefit transitional protection will lose as a result of the erosion factor in housing benefit in April 1989.

26. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of housing benefit transitional protection will lose as a result of the erosion factor in housing benefit in April 1989.

31. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of housing benefit transitional protection will lose as a result of the erosion factor in housing benefit in April 1989.

32. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of housing benefit transitional protection will lose as a result of the erosion factor in housing benefit in April 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Transitional protection is usually reduced by the amount of any increase in other income which an applicant has received since the transitional protection was awarded. However for housing benefit transitional payments we have decided to limit the reduction to a flat rate deduction of £2 per week from April 1989. This will ensure that the vast majority of those receiving housing benefit transitional payments will gain overall in cash terms. Special arrangements will apply for a very small number of people—less than 1 per cent.—who are largely dependent on social security benefits and who would otherwise see a cash loss.

63. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was paid in housing benefit as direct payment to private landlords during the last 12 months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that no information is collected centrally on the amount of housing benefit paid direct to landlords.

Expenditure

18. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the amount and proportion of total public expenditure which will be allocated to social security in 1988-89; and what were the comparable figures for five and 10 years before, respectively.

Mr. Scott: In 1978-79, the last year of the Labour Government, expenditure on the social security programme was £16,400 million, just about one quarter of all planned public spending; by 1983-84 spending had reached £35,200 million, about 30 per cent. of the total. The latest estimate is that £47,600 million will be spent on social security in 1988-89, 31 per cent. of the estimated outturn for total planned expenditure.

Child Benefit

20. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he received following his decision to freeze child benefit.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis) earlier today.

30. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from organisations involved in helping the disabled about the freeze on child benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 27 October, we have received representations on behalf of a number of organisations including those involved in helping the disabled.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he received following his decision to freeze child benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis) earlier today.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide in the Official Report a table which shows the level of family allowance child benefit in each of the member states of the European Community for a one, two, three and four-child family, using European currency units, at the latest date for which comparable data are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information regarding family allowances/child benefit in each of the member states of the European Community is contained in the Department's annual publication "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Communities". Copies are held in the Library for each year since 1973.

These tables set out the levels of benefit in the national currencies together with the sterling equivalent converted according to the OECD's purchasing power parity figures as shown in the introduction to the tables.

Conversion rates between European currency units and national currencies are set out in the Official Journal of the European Community, copies of which are also held in the Library.

Housing Benefit and Transitional Payments

21. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applicants for housing benefit and transitional payments are still waiting for their claims to be settled.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: More than 300,000 of the 395,000 applications received to date have been settled. The majority of the remainder are awaiting the return of the inquiry form which is sent to the relevant local authority.

Pensioners

22. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much additional money he plans to spend on poorer pensioners.

Mr. Scott: The package of help for poorer pensioners that we announced on 24 November 1988 will cost an additional amount of almost £100 million in 1989-90 and almost £200 million in a full year.

40. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will benefit from the new scheme for pensioners announced on 24 November.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We estimate that 2·6 million individuals will benefit from the new scheme for pensioners.

46. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he is doing to help poorer pensioners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is proposed that income support and housing benefit paid to pensioners will be restructured from October 1989. There will be new premiums for pensioners aged 75 and over, 80 and over and disabled pensioners. These new premiums will give single pensioners currently on income support an extra £2.50 a week, and couples an extra £3.50 a week over and above the increases announced for the April uprating.

Those pensioners with incomes above income support levels but receiving housing benefit will also benefit.

60. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of people whose income places them above the qualifying level for income support, who will benefit from the recent pensions announcement targeting extra help on poorer pensioners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We estimate that around 1 million people whose incomes will be above income support levels before the changes will benefit from them. This figure reflects the estimated impact on the community charge benefit system. The numbers benefiting from the changes in October 1989 will be slightly lower than this final figure, reflecting the fact that the community charge will be only partially introduced and that projections for rate rebate caseload are lower than that for community charge benefit.

Pensioners (Living Standards)

25. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how pensioners' living standards have changed since the 1970s.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Pensioners' total average net incomes increased in real terms by 23 per cent. during our first seven years in office. Under Labour (1974-79) they increased by just 3 per cent.

Hardship Payments

27. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people under the age of 18 years have been granted hardship payments since September.

Mr. Scott: A total of 1,269.

Claimants (Service)

29. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is being done to speed up the service to social security claimants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am pleased to say that the social security reforms, introduced in April, have produced a benefits system which is easier for claimants to understand and for staff to administer. As a result income support claims are, on average, being processed in five days as compared with six last year and national error rates have fallen from 11·5 per cent. to 9·7 per cent. We expect to be able to improve further in these areas.

In addition some claims processing work is to be relocated away from some London offices where staff recruitment and turnover seriously affect performance standards. These measures plus proposals for a new staff complementing system which directly relates staffing needs to required levels of performance will make a significant impact on standards in local offices with particular problems.

In the longer term the computerisation of social security operations which begins in 1989 will make a major contribution to permanent improvements in the speed and accuracy of benefit payments.

Christmas Bonus

33. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to increase the Christmas bonus to pensioners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to do so.

55. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the present value of the pensioners' Christmas bonus if it had been uprated annually, in line with the retail price index, since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The December 1987 value of the Christmas bonus would have been £17·03 if it had been uprated annually since 1979 in line with the movement in the retail prices index.

64. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the value of the pensioners' Christmas bonus.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We believe that the £10 cash bonus remains a genuine help to pensioners at an expensive time of year.

14. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have received the Christmas bonus in the current month.

Mr. Scott: The Christmas bonus exercise has now been completed and over 12 million people—pensioners, widows and the disabled—have received their bonus.

Income Support (EC Nationals)

35. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the position of EEC nationals who claim income support (a) during the first six months of their stay in the United Kingdom and (b) during any subsequent period if they have not applied for a resident's permit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: EC nationals are entitled to income support during the first six months of their stay, provided that they meet the normal conditions of the benefit such as availability for work. After six months, continued entitlement depends on whether they are exercising rights of residence under EC law; for example, those classed as "workers" would continue to be entitled to benefit, and those no longer exercising EC treaty rights would not be so entitled.

Social Fund

36. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes in the guidelines for the disbursement of the social fund have been issued to his Department's offices since April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There have been seven amendments issued since April to the social fund manual. The amendments have covered general changes to the guidance and procedures, changes to the directions and new instructions on cold weather payments.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to improve the take-up of community care grants from the social fund.

Mr. Scott: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 14 December at columns 591-92.

Mobility Allowance

37. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on retirement pensioners' eligibility for the mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: To qualify for mobility allowance, a person must fulfil the qualifying condition of being unable or virtually unable to walk before his or her 65th birthday. A claim is valid if it is received before the person's 66th birthday, but it can succeed only by showing that the medical conditions were fulfilled by the earlier age. Once an allowance has been awarded it can, if the conditions continue to be fulfilled, remain in payment until the recipient reaches age 75, but my right hon. Friend announced on 27 October that legislation is to be brought forward to extend this upper age limit to 80.

Low-income Families

38. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is being done to help families on low incomes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are making extra resources of £70 million available from next April for families receiving income-related benefits. This is in addition to the £135 million needed to uprate income-related benefit child allowances. These extra resources will benefit up to 3 million children.

Homeless People

39. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will clarify his Department's press release of 19 October about benefits for homeless people on guidance which could draw attention to the power to pay some benefit in the first week of a claim, including a full week's board and lodging payment if this falls due during the period covered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Full instructions were issued to local offices in a circular relating to the income support manual. I have today placed a copy of this circular (IS 14/88) in the Library.

Income Support

43. Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the transitional arrangements for claimants on income support.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Income support transitional protection is provided under the Income Support (Transitional) Regulations 1987. It is estimated that some 1·4 million former supplementary benefit recipients got this protection when income support was introduced in April 1988. It is further estimated that some 500,000 income support recipients will have transitional additions after the uprating of this benefit in April 1989.

Widows

45. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received concerning benefits for widows since the implementation of the Social Security Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since April 1988 we have received 645 such representations.

Disability Premium

47. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to suspend the six months qualifying date for disability premium in cases such as AIDS or cancer.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so at the present time. The income support scheme is being monitored, and the premium structure will be reviewed in the light of the results of that exercise and of the OPCS surveys of disability in Great Britain.

Benefits

53. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is being done to improve levels of consistency and accuracy in the payment of benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Improvements in the benefit service are being sought and achieved in a number of ways. Standards of promptness and accuracy are defined nationally and turned into performance targets for each management unit, with a view to more consistent and higher standards of service. It is clear that since the benefit reforms earlier this year, claims are now being processed more quickly and accurately. The Department expects to secure further improvements through its planned programme of computerisation over the next few years.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many young persons in each local district have lost entitlement to any benefit after the end of the eight weeks' bridging allowance.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available.

Pensioners (Severe Weather)

54. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how he is helping pensioners to keep warm this winter.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 8 December 1988.

Income Support (Brent)

57. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the total numbers claiming income support in the London borough of Brent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The London borough of Brent is served by the Cricklewood, Neasden, Harlesden, Hendon, Harrow, Edgware, Notting Hill and Ealing local offices of the Department although their boundaries are not conterminous. The total number of persons claiming income support in these offices as at 31 August 1988, the latest information available, is 79,566.

(Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action, which may include a small number of cases not actually in receipt of income support. This figure is provisional and subject to amendment.)

Operational Strategy

58. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will indicate when the operational strategy will be up and running.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have recently brought forward our plans to implement the operational strategy, our huge computerisation programme for social security. We will now complete the computerisation of the main social security benefits handled by local offices by the middle of 1991, nine months earlier than previously planned. The operational strategy will transform the administration of social security, bringing major improvements in service and efficiency, and in job satisfaction for our staff.

Claimants (Rates)

59. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's policy regarding the direct payment of rates to a rating authority from the benefit of income support claimants who have a severe mental disturbance.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The direct payment arrangements do not extend to the minimum contribution to domestic rates which claimants are expected to meet from their benefits. Where someone is unable to manage their own affairs another person can be appointed to act on their behalf.

Disabled People (Community Care)

65. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to improve the level of provision of voluntary care for the disabled within the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Disabled people living in the community and their informal carers are best placed to decide on the most appropriate form of voluntary care arrangements. Such arrangements can be backed up by the local authorities who are required to assess an individual disabled person for a range of services under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 when requested to do so.

Elderly People

67. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to review the assistance given to elderly people in private residential accommodation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are looking at assistance for elderly people in residential care as part of the Government's consideration of Sir Roy Griffiths' report on community care.

Transitional Payments

68. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of claimants is currently in receipt of transitional payments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is estimated that slightly more than 20 per cent. of all income support recipients are in receipt of transitional protection.

Widow's Benefits

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the changes in widows' benefits and allowances.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The widows' benefit changes, which came into effect in April 1988, are designed to target help more effectively on older widows and those with dependent children. Transitional arrangements enabled those women widowed before April to retain the category of widow's benefit that they were receiving at the time of the changes. The first statistical information in respect of the new scheme will be available in July 1989.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will investigate the reasons why the invalid care allowance unit, Palatine house, Lancaster road, Preston, has not replied to letters sent by Mrs. R. A. Mottishead of 28 Austin close, Walton Stone, Staffordshire, in respect of her application for an invalid care allowance, reference No. 071553.

Mr. Scott: The invalid care allowance unit does not hold any unanswered letters from Mrs. Mottishead. I regret that processing of her claim has taken longer than is usual and I am writing to my hon. Friend.

Investigators

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what informal liaison arrangements there are between fraud investigators in his Department and the police; and how often during the last 12 months these arrangements have been used in the Doncaster area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The need for liaison between the Department's fraud investigators and the police is determined by the nature of the investigation and will vary accordingly. No records are kept in respect of the number of occasions on which contact with the police has been necessary.

Computerisation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the (a) original cost estimates and (b) current estimates of his Department's operational strategy computerisation programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Members for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) and for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 5 December at column 61.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give staffing allocations for 1988-89 for each of his Department's offices in Bristol, and the comparable staffing levels for 1987-88, broken down by section; with percentage change figures for overall numbers of staff involved in fraud investigation work.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is shown in the tables.

Hardship Allowance

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claims for hardship allowance have been made, over (a) the last three months and (b) the last six months, by those disqualified from benefit as a result of having been unable to find or take up a YTS place; and how many have been granted;

(2) how many claims for hardship allowance have been received in the Grampian region over the last three months from those disqualified from benefit as a result of not having been able to find or take up a YTS place; and how many have been granted.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Loss of benefit results, not from a failure to find or take up a YTS place, but from the provision in the Social Security Act 1988 withdrawing general entitlement to income support from 16 and 17-year-olds. There are circumstances in which benefit can, nevertheless, be paid. These include the situation where the young person would otherwise unavoidably suffer severe hardship.

In the 13 weeks following the withdrawal of general entitlement to income support on 12 September, 1,889 applications for a direction by the Secretary of State under the "severe hardship" provision were received. In 1,269 cases a direction was given to enable payment to be made.

While applications from the Grampian region as a whole are not easily identifiable, a total of 66 applications have been received up to now from the Department's offices in Aberdeen; in 42 instances a direction has been given.

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the cost over (a) the last three months and (b) the last six months, of telephone calls from and to local officers of Department of Social Security as a result of having to refer centrally all hardship claims from those disqualified from benefit as a result of having been unable to find or take a YTS place.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available. Telephone calls made from local offices to DSS headquarters in relation to young people's claims for income support on grounds of hardship are not differentiated in accounts from other business calls. Equally, no separate record is kept of the cost of telephone calls from headquarters to local offices on the same matter.

Income Support (Young People)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security where income support is provided to persons under the age of 18 years, whether inquiries are made to establish whether such persons are missing or wanted.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Vaccine Damage Payments

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many vaccine damage payments have been made since 1980 which arose from damage caused by (a) polio vaccination and (b) whooping cough vaccination; and what were the ages of the children at the time the vaccination took place.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the requested information is not available. The information which is available is set out in the table.

Vaccine Damage Payments Scheme

Information to analyse awards by age at the time of vaccination is not readily available and could be extracted only at disproportionate expense.

Family Credit

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to require or encourage recipients of benefits to have their benefits paid into a bank account.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 5 December at column 63.

HEALTH

Free Prescriptions

83. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people, whose circumstances and income entitlements have not changed, lost their right to free prescriptions when the new social security regulations came into force in April; and in how many cases the loss was due to a surplus of income over requirements which was under £1.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information.

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many National Health Service patients have been sent to private or Army hospitals in an effort to reduce surgery waiting lists.

Mr. Mellor: Over the past five years, service hospitals have treated each year on average 46,000 NHS in-patients and day cases and provided for 237,000 NHS out-patient attendances. In 1986 (latest available figures) some 8,800 NHS surgical patients were treated under contractual arrangements with the independent sector.

In 1987-88, the waiting list fund enabled an additional 4,500 NHS in-patients and day cases from the waiting list and 680 extra NHS out-patients to be treated in service hospitals or the independent sector. In the current year, 6,500 additional in-patients and day cases and 400 extra out-patients are planned to be treated in this way.

Privatisation (Ancillary Services)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the costs so far in redundancy and early retirement payments resulting from the privatisation of National Health Service ancillary services in the northern region.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold centrally records of National Health Service staff redundancies. The figures give the superannuation costs in each year since 1985/86—the first for which figures are available—of premature retirements of ancillary staff within the Northern regional health authority as a result of competitive tendering.

Nurses (Grading)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department gives to health authority members asked to consider the grading of a ward sister who meets seven out of 11 criteria laid down to meet consideration for an 'I' grading but who only manages one ward; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Posts should not be graded at a particular level unless they meet the grading definitions, which have been agreed between management and the trade unions, in full.

Nurses (Qualifications)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the costs of each place for state-enrolled nurses taking the state-registered nurse qualification;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report each school of nursing offering courses for state-enrolled nurses wishing to acquire the state-registered nurse qualification; and if he will denote the region in which the school of nursing is located;

(3) if he has been informed of any district health authorities who are now ceasing to lay on courses for state-enrolled nurses wishing to become state-registered nurses; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what steps he has taken to ensure that each regional and district health authority has adequate funds to finance training courses for state-enrolled nurses wishing to acquire the state-registered nurse qualification;

(5) how many state-enrolled nurses have expressed a wish to be retrained to become state-registered nurses.

Mr. Mellor: It is for health authorities to decide their training priorities and allocate funds accordingly. We do not hold information centrally on the way in which individual health authorities choose to exercise this responsibility, or on the number of enrolled nurses wishing to convert to first-level nursing.

Information supplied by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting (ENB) shows that the number of schools of nursing approved to run the 52-week conversion course for enrolled nurses to gain the registered general nursing qualification has increased from three in 1986 to 86 in October 1988. I understand that further courses are in the planning stage. The hon. Member may wish to contact the ENB Resource and Careers Service at PO Box 356, Sheffield S80 SF, which holds details of the schools which have approval. Information on the costs for each place for enrolled nurses is not available.

I am not aware of any health authorities cancelling conversion courses, but if the hon. Member has a specific case, I would be pleased to make inquiries. The Government's response to the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting (UKCC) Project 2000 proposals, in May 1988, stressed the need to increase the number of enrolled nurse conversion courses. We therefore welcome the circular recently issued by the UKCC, setting out new approaches for conversion, designed to create greater opportunities and flexibility for enrolled nurses to convert to first level training.

Regional health authorities have also been made aware that we shall be discussing firm targets for conversion with them as part of the regional review process.

Radiation Errors

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all 21 recommendations made as a result of the inquiry into the radiation errors at the Royal Devon and Exeter hospital.

Mr. Mellor: I have arranged for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library.

Organ Transplant Operations

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of organ transplant operations are successful, organ by organ; how many of these are first-time operations; and what percentage of organs are being required by those who have used up the useful life of their first transplant.

Mr. Mellor: According to information provided by the United Kingdom transplant service, the survival of first cadaveric kidney grafts at one year is approximately 75 per cent., and for second grafts about 70 per cent. Numbers of subsequent grafts are too small to provide meaningful estimates. In 1986, about 20 per cent. of all cadaveric kidney transplants were regrafts. Many of the original grafts would have required replacement because they had been rejected, or failed for some other reason. Comprehensive statistics on graft survival for other forms of transplantation are not held centrally.

Prescriptions

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the National Health Service of the 25·5 million prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists in 1987.

Mr. Mellor: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to prescriptions for benzodiazepines. The net ingredient cost of the 25·5 million prescriptions for these drugs dispensed in Great Britain in 1987 was £25·3 million.

Benzodiazepine

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds will be allocated under the central funding initiative to projects in the catering specifically for benzodiazepine dependence in 1989-90.

Mr. Mellor: None. The central funding initiative was set up in 1983 and grants were awarded for a maximum of three years. Most grants have now therefore ended.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the chief medical officer has met the representatives of the medical profession to discuss benzodiazepine prescribing; what further action has been decided upon to reduce the number of people taking; benzodiazepines; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The chief medical officer held a useful meeting with representatives of the medical profession on 22 November to discuss benzodiazepines. We are considering what action might be taken to follow up some of the helpful suggestions made.

Ms. Primarolo To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends to seek to establish precise figures to show the level of trend in benzodiazepine dependence in future.

Mr. Mellor: It is unlikely that it would be possible to obtain accurate statistical data on those dependent on benzodiazopines. What is important is to encourage careful prescribing of benzodiazepines, to promote alternatives to their use, and to provide services for those experiencing problems as a result of their dependence; the hon. Member will be aware of the initiatives the Government are taking in this respect.

Central Funding Initiative

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds will be made available to local statutory and voluntary sector projects under the central funding initiative in 1989-90.

Mr. Mellor: A total of £747,006 will be allocated to statutory and voluntary projects in 1989-90 under the central funding initiative for drug misusers.

Drug Misuse

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what allocation of funds will be made to regional health authorities in the United Kingdom for the development of services for drug misusers in 1989-90;

(2) what funds will be allocated to the South West regional health authority for the development of drug misuse services, including services for those dependent on benzodiazepines in 1989-90.

Mr. Mellor: We shall announce the allocation of funds to health authorities for 1989-90 shortly.

Bristol Drugs Project

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds will be allocated under the central funding initiative to the Bristol drugs project in future.

Mr. Mellor: Their grant ceased in 1988. A total of £226,070 was awarded to the project under this scheme from 1985 to 1988. Grants under the scheme are for a maximum of three years.

NHS Property and Land

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list sales of National Health property and land by regional health authority area since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The information is in the table.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the sales of National Health Service property and land by district health authorities area since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect routinely in the Department information of sales of NHS property and land by district health authorities.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list moneys payable to each district health authority from other health authorities for the provision of services for the mentally ill since June 1987.

Mr. Mellor: I regret that we do not hold the information centrally.

Salmonella (Eggs)

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the results of the outbreaks of salmonella that have been confirmed by him as being attributable to eggs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Over 1,000 people suffered salmonella food poisoning in the 49 reported outbreaks of salmonellosis associated with the consumption of eggs.

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many outbreaks of salmonella attributed by him to eggs could be attributed to the following factors (a) unhygienic food preparation in kitchens, (b) inadequate care in storage and transportation and (c) bad stockmanship on farms.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no evidence available which attributes outbreaks of salmonella from eggs to these factors.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the infection of turkeys, chickens and eggs with salmonella first came to the attention of his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Throughout the post-war years, reports on food poisoning and salmonella infection in England and Wales have indicated that poultry has been a significant source of this infection in humans.

District Health Authorities (Property)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the occasions since 1979 when consultation documents have been issued by district health authorities on properties in use by them which have been closed on a temporary basis by the district health authorities prior to the expiry date of consultation.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Health Authorities (Access to Information)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation in line with that contained within the Health Authorities (Access to Information) Bill, introduced in the last Session of Parliament, at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Mellor: No.

National Health Service Premises

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all temporary closures of National Health Service premises by regional health authorities and district health authorities area since 1979, showing which facilities are currently open.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that the guidelines contained within HSC(IS)207 "Closure or Change of Use of Health Buildings" are adhered to.

Mr. Mellor: Health authorities should be aware of the guidelines. Ministers are prepared to consider any instance where this does not seem to have happened.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will indicate the difference between the categories of (a) temporary and (b) provisional when it is applied to closures of facilities or services within the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: The Community Health Council Regulations 1985, which prescribe procedures to be followed when a health authority wishes to substantially vary the services it provides, do not identify different categories of variations in services.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to increase the budgets of community health councils.

Mr. Mellor: Community health councils are funded by regional health authorities who make the relevant decisions.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider making extra funding available for the purpose of producing and distributing a regular national publication for community health councils, to be edited under their control.

Mr. Mellor: Such a publication exists. It is produced by the Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales who are funded mainly by member community health councils and by a grant from this Department.

Radiation (Royal Devon and Exeter Hospital)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received any requests from health authorities in the south-west for assistance in funding the compensation to be paid to patients who were damaged by excessive radiation during treatment at the Royal Devon and Exeter hospital.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Family Planning Clinics

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many National Health Service family planning clinics have been closed in each of the last three years; by what amount staffing levels have changed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold information centrally in the form requested. National figures for the number of health authority family planning clinics and sessions provided in the last three years for which figures are available are set out in the table.

Family Planning Clinic Service—England
Community and hospital clinics[1]

	1984	1985	1986
Premises regularly used for family planning sessions	1,768	1,746	1,756
Sessions (all types)[2]	197,127	196,075	195,700

[1]The table covers all clinic services including any provided by voluntary bodies or others on an agency basis.

[2]A session with two doctors has been included as two sessions. If more than one nurse was present at a "nurse only" session it has been included as one session unless each nurse was advising a separate group.

Medical Records

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has from research conducted by his Department or by external researchers about the quality of medical records, and in particular about the extent to which hospitals notify general practitioners about the treatment their patients receive in hospital.

Mr. Mellor: We have no knowledge of recent studies directed specifically to this area.

Dalkon Shield Association

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will meet with representatives of the Dalkon Shield Association to discuss the problems that women who contaced them have encountered in obtaining information about their past medical treatment.

Mr. Mellor: If a request for a meeting is received we shall consider it. I refer, however, the right hon. Member to earlier replies on 28 November 1988 at column 139, which give the basis of our response to inquiries. In particular, it is our long-standing advice to health authorties to be as helpful as possible to patients seeking this kind of information.

HIV

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has about the infectivity of HIV in saliva in vitro.

Mr.Mellor: Expert advice is that there are a few studies in which HIV has been isolated from the saliva of a small miniroy of HIV seropositive patients studied. The presene of HIV in saliva from these individuals was demontrated by techniques involving in-vitro transmissior of the virus to mononuclear cells.

However, epidemiological studies show no evidence for the trasmission of HIV through saliva.

Lymphatic Cancer and Leukaemia

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the report from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment about the incidence of lymphatic cancer and leukaenia in young children living close to atomic weapons research establishment Aldermaston and atomic weapons research establishment Burghfield.

Mr.Mellor: Following the committee's meeting earlier this month, I expect their report to be finalised in the new year. COMARE's chairman has earlier offered to meet my hon. Fiend.

Smoking

Mr.Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he is taking to implement the recommendations of the section in the fourth report of the Independent Scientic Committee on Smoking and Health relating to the heath hazards of passive smoking; and if he will make a statenent;

(2) if he will make a statement on the recommendations in the fourth report of the Independent Scientific Committee on Smoking and Health that every workplace with smoking and non-smoking employees should have a properly negotiated smoking police; and what steps he is taking to ensure that a workplace smoking policy is the norm rather than the exception.

Mr. Mellor: The report recommended:

"Consideration should be given to ways of ensuring that in the work and leisure environments, in public transport and in other public enclosed spaces smokers can be segregated from non-smokers".

The Government support the voluntary extension of smoke-free areas, including in the workplace. We have been actively encouraging Action on Smoking and Health in its development of a consultancy service to assist employers in the designing of workplace smoking policies. The Health and Safety Executive has recently published a free booklet entitled "Passive smoking at work" which suggests ways of reducing the exposure of non-smokers to tobacco smoke at work and answers some of the questions about the health risks of passive smoking.

The fourth report made a number of other recommendations on the subject of passive smoking. The Health Education Authority has publicised the risk of lung cancer associated with passive smoking. The role of environmental tobacco smoke in the occurrence of respiratory illness in children will be kept under review.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking on the recommendation of the chief medical officer that a clear commitment to a smoke-free environment for all Health Service staff and in all health premises should be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In May 1985, a circular was issued to NHS authorities offering general anti-smoking advice and asking them to draw up policy statements with a view to making non-smoking normal practice on Health Service premises and for Health Service staff.

Recent surveys have shown that, while a number of authorities have developed comprehensive policies, some still have scope for further progress. We are currently engaged in drafting a revised version of that circular which will draw upon the latest evidence of the damage to health done by passive smoking.

Lodgings and Unregistered Homes

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the survey on the provision of care in supported lodgings and unregistered homes conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Mr. Mellor: The results of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys study of supported lodgings and residential homes are included in two reports. The first report on supported lodgings also includes some results on unregistered homes and was published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in November. The second report, on residential homes and nursing homes, will include the remaining results on unregistered homes. That report is in preparation, and OPCS hopes to publish it in the summer of next year.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources have been made available to the National Children's Home during each of the past 10 years; and what funds he proposes to make available to the National Children's Home for the year 1989.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold the information centrally for the years before 1984-85. Grant aid approved for the National Children's Home for the financial years 1984-85 to 1989-90 is as follows:

Year	Grants made under general scheme of S.64 grants (£,000)	Grants made under I.T. Initiative (£,000)	Grants made -Under 5s Initiative (£,000)	Total (£,000)
1985-86	—	779·8	47·5	827·3
1986-87	7·7	584·6	85·8	678·1
1987-88	19·5	275·0	—	294·5
1988-89	17·5	275·0	—	294·5
1989-90	8·8	—	—	8·8

In addition, the National Children's Home has applied for a grant of £84,000 over three years, starting in October 1989, to help meet the cost of manning a telephone counselling service in Leeds for survivors of sexual abuse. A decision on this application has yet to be taken.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether each district health authority has continuous and adequate supplies of the new measles, mumps and rubella vaccine.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that all orders from health authorities for MMR vaccine have been, and will continue to be, met in full by the manufacturers.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms Amnesty

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what powers he acted in offering the recent firearms amnesty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The amnesty had no statutory basis. It amounted to an agreement by chief officers of police, with the consent of my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General, not to bring criminal proceedings for unlawful possession against those who surrendered illegally held firearms to the police during the period of the amnesty.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list in the Official Report the types of intrusion he is trying to prohibit in designing his departmental computer security systems;

(2) what steps are being taken to protect departmental computer systems against theft of data, malicious damage or illegal tampering with data;

(3) whether encryption techniques are being employed in his department security system;

(4) what plans he has to deal with the safety of back-up storage facilities for computer data in his departmental security systems;

(5) what plans he has to control access to information held in individual files in his departmental computer systems;

(6) whether his computer security system will restrict access to the originator of the data;

(7) what recovery procedures are available to a security supervisor of his departmental computer system when passwords are forgotten;

(8) if there is any system for monitoring terminal usage in his departmental computer system;

(9) what procedures exist to remove protection on particular files to make computer data available for general release;

(10) whether his departmental security system includes physical devices such as keys to protect computer data.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Office has a large number of mainframe, mini and micro computer based systems in use. To safeguard them, there exists a wide range of measures designed to protect the data that they contain from all known threats, including unauthorised access and intrusion. Given the wide range of systems in use, it would not be practicable to list all the protective measures which support them; nor, for obvious reasons, would it be sensible to make such information public. All aspects of risk to computer systems are kept under review, and additional precautions are taken as and when necessary.

Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the prison population in England and Wales on 1 December 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 2 December 1988, there were 49,235 persons in prison service establishments in England and Wales and 937 prisoners in police cells. The corresponding figures for 4 December 1987 were 48,697 and 793 respectively.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present weekly cost of keeping a person in prison in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on the costs of running the prison service is published in the annual reports on its work, copies of which are in the Library. The report for 1987-88 (CM 516) shows that the average weekly cost of keeping a person in a penal establishment in England and Wales in that year was £275 (see Appendix 6, Table D).

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in England and Wales that only receive inmates on rule 43.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No prisons in England and Wales receive only inmates on rule 43.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the prison remand population in England and Wales on 1 December 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 31 October 1988, the latest date for which information is available, there were about 10,250 untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners in prison service establishments in England and Wales. A further 1,531 prisoners, most of whom were on remand, were held in police cells. The corresponding figures on 31 October 1987 were 10,550 and 910 respectively.

Prisons (Strip Searches)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of strip searches made on women prisoners in prisons in England and Wales from 1 January to 30 November; and if he will list such searches at each prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not available.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of prison inmates who have been charged under prison rules of having unlawful drugs in their possession in each of the last three years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of charges for possession of controlled drugs, dealt with by governors or boards of visitors in prison service establishments was about 1,540 in 1987 and 1,630 in 1986. Information for earlier years is not available.

Immigration

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what percentage of overseas applicants for settlement in the United Kingdom have been successful on the basis of DNA testing since he approved that system for use in immigration and visa cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I regret that this information is not available.

Prisoners (Transport)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many divisions use taxis to transport prisoners (a) to court and (b) to other prisons; and if he will give details of the numbers involved and a breakdown of the costs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on the extent and cost of the use of taxis by prison establishments in England and Wales is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Taxis are used when circumstances—for example, short notice or urgency—prevent recourse to the normal movement arrangements which operate in the particular locality and which mostly involve contract coaches or minibuses.

Prison Nurses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will recognise the Royal College of Nursing to represent nurses who work in prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No approach has been made by the Royal College of Nursing to represent nurse grade staff working in prison service establishments. Should an approach be made it will be considered on its merits.

Identity Cards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department has investigated, or is currently studying, the usefulness of a national identity card to his departmental responsibilities towards national security and the implications of such a scheme for his Department's use of the national insurance computer in Newcastle; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central, (Mr. Darling), on 15 December 1988 at columns 1080-82.

Prescription Charges (Policemen)

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to alter the arrangements under which policemen are able to reclaim National Health Service prescription charges.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This matter is under consideration by the police negotiating board. The staff side has rejected an official side proposal that police officers should be reimbursed NHS charges only when they arise from injury sustained on duty or from work-related illness and the board is now considering whether the issue should be referred to arbitration.

"Satanic Verses"

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from Bolton requesting prosecution of the publishers of Salman Rushdie's book "Satanic Verses" for incitement to racial hatred.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has received no representations from residents of Bolton calling for the prosecution of the publishers of this book for the offence of incitement to racial hatred. He has, however, received several representations from hon. Members, including my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East, (Mr. Thurnham) and numerous letters and petitions from members of the public and Muslim organisations, calling in more general terms for this book to be banned. My right hon. Friend has no power to ban any book. The law on incitement to racial hatred is contained in part III of the Public Order Act 1986. Prosecutions under this Act are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General.

Drinking (Christmas)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state, in the light of the outcome of Alcohol Awareness Week, what measures the Government have planned to discourage excessive drinking over the Christmas period, particularly in connection with driving.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My hon. Friend the Minister responsible for roads and traffic launched the latest phase of the Government's campaign against drinking and driving on 5 December. In addition to widespread Government advertising in all sections of the media, the campaign draws together initiatives by local authorities, the police service and the private sector, including the brewing industry.

The ministerial group on alcohol misuse, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council, is taking forward Government action on the wider aspects of alcohol misuse. Measures recently announced include joint departmental funding of the support costs for a pre-Christmas Radio 1 alcohol awareness initiative aimed at young people.

Police Operation (Acton)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the conduct and timing of the police operation in Old Oak Common lane, Acton, on 14 December; what liaison was carried out with the Post Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the robbery in Old Oak Common lane occurred during a surveillance operation in which there was no opportunity either to influence the timing of events or to liaise in advance with the Post Office. It would not be right to comment further on the conduct of the operation as the case is now the subject of criminal proceedings.

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will take steps to upgrade the computer system in the missing persons bureau in New Scotland Yard.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is for the Commission of Police of the Metropolis to determine whether the computer system currently used in the bureau should be upgraded. I understand that he has this under consideration, but it will have to be considered against other needs.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will take steps to ensure that persons whose names are on the register of missing persons in the missing persons bureau at New Scotland Yard are removed therefrom when they have been found;

(2) whether he will take steps to require the notification to the police national computer bureau and to the missing persons bureau at New Scotland Yard of persons known to be missing in the Metropolitan police district who are not themselves vulnerable, but whom the police have reason to believe may cause harm to others.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: These are operational matters for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. I understand however that when the missing persons bureau is notified that a person has been found their records are updated accordingly; and that the bureau contains information on persons missing in the Metropolitan police district who are believed to be a risk to others.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what crimes have allegedly been committed by persons who are both missing and wanted for alleged crimes, during the last year for which records are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will take steps to require all police authorities to inform the police national computer bureau of every unidentified dead body found in their jurisdiction.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This is a matter for individual chief officers of police. I understand however that chief officers do circulate details of unidentified bodies as necessary and may use the police national computer broadcast system for this purpose.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has considered the report of the Association of Chief Police Officers concerning the creation of a national register for missing persons;

(2) whether he will create a national register for missing persons as recommended by the report of the Association of Chief Police Officers; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how much he estimates it would cost to create a national register for missing persons as recommended by the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Association of Chief Police Officers has set up a working party to review police procedures for dealing with inquiries relating to missing persons. We have not yet seen the report, which I understand has yet to be considered by the association's council. We will be happy to consider any recommendations which the association may put to us.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will require all chief officers of forces other than the Metropolitan police to provide him with statistics relating to missing persons, similar to those which he supplied to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West concerning the Metropolitan district, in his answer of 5 December, Official Report, columns 30-31.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to his questions on 5 December at columns 30-31.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will discuss methods whereby records in respect of missing and of wanted persons, respectively, may be made available where required by police trying to locate such persons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The decision on whether, and in what circumstances, information about missing and wanted persons should be circulated or otherwise made available is an operational matter for chief officers of police, who have established a working party to review police procedures for dealing with inquiries relating to missing persons.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will consult the Salvation Army investigation department, so as to assist its efforts to reunite families where one of the spouses or parents has gone missing.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no requests for assistance from the Salvation Army investigation department. We would of course be willing to consider any such requests.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has sought European Economic Community funding in order to comply with Council of Europe recommendation R(79)6, concerning the establishment of a national register of missing persons;

(2) what steps have been taken to comply with the Council of Europe recommendation R(79)6 during each of the years since that recommendation was made.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Recommendation No. R(79)6 of the Committee of Ministers concerns operational procedures which are a matter for chief officers of police.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the names, ages and last known whereabouts of all persons who have been missing in the Metropolitan police area for more than three months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It would not be right for my right hon. Friend to do so. I understand however that the police publish names and other details where it is appropriate to do so in the individual case, for instance where they have particular reason to believe that the person would be in danger.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the instructions concerning procedures for tracing missing persons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Responsibility for procedures for tracing missing persons rests with individual chief officers of police. It is for them to issue the necessary instructions within their force.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons are now wanted in connection with police inquiries in the Metropolitan police district and elsewhere in the United Kingdom, respectively, concerning alleged crimes; and what steps are taken to trace such persons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that on 15 October 1988, 26,093 persons in the Metropolitan police district were wanted in connection with police inquiries concerning alleged crimes. In the whole of the United Kingdom the number of persons wanted was 97,010, although this figure includes missing persons, aliens and people wanted for non-payment of fines who were all excluded from the Metropolitan figure. More detailed figures are not readily available.

Steps taken to trace such persons include the circulation of their details in the Police Gazette, which is sent to all forces. If any of these persons are known to be living in a particular area this is brought to the attention of local police officers during briefings.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will increase liaison with Interpol concerning persons missing in the United Kingdom and wanted in connection with criminal inquiries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The use of Interpol is an operational matter for the police. All forces are well aware of the facilities provided by Interpol to assist them in their inquiries.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inquiries the Metropolitan police received from other forces in respect of missing persons during the last year for which records are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information is published in the report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis 1987, Cm. 389, a copy of which is in the Library.

Broadcasting

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will be responsible for setting the cost of transmission facilities for broadcasters on Channels 3 and 5.

Mr. Renton: The Government envisage that the UHF transmission system will move progressively into the private sector. The precise arrangements for setting transmission charges, both after privatisation and in the interim period before then, will depend on wider questions about the future of the transmission system on which the Government have yet to take a view. We will be consulting the BBC, the IBA and other interested parties about these matters.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sanctions will be available to the Independent Television Commission in the event of the owner of a Channel 3 franchise failing to meet his target of 25 per cent. production by independent companies.

Mr. Renton: Paragraph 6.19 of the White Paper "Broadcasting in the 90s" proposes that the ITC should have power to issue a formal warning—a yellow card—and one year later to remove a licensee—a red card. The Government are considering whether, as an additional sanction, the ITC should be able to impose financial penalties.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Independent Television Commission will have the power to preview programmes to be broadcast on Channels 3, 4 and 5.

Mr. Renton: The ITC will not have the IBA's responsibility for detailed approval of scheduling or prior clearance of particular programmes, but the Government are considering further whether there are any circumstances in respect of which the ITC should have a reserve power to preview programmes.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy to leave to the discretion of the Independent Television Commission the decision on when, in relation to the financial bids for franchising, to review assurances of programme quality.

Mr. Renton: Paragraph 6.17 of the White Paper "Broadcasting in the 90s" proposes that the ITC should operate a two-stage procedure. In the first stage applicants for licences would have to pass a quality threshold, including satisfying the ITC that they would meet consumer protection and positive programme requirements. In the second stage applicants who pass this quality threshold would be invited to offer financial tenders for the licence.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) further to his White Paper on broadcasting, whether the Independent Television Commission will have the power to limit the number of minutes of advertising broadcast each hour on Channels 3, 4 and 5;

(2) whether the Independent Television Commission will have the power to limit the number of advertising breaks per broadcast on Channels 3, 4 and 5;

(3) further to his White Paper on broadcasting, whether the Independent Television Commission will have the powers to ensure that advertising is sold only at rates specified on the rate card;

(4) further to his White Paper on broadcasting, whether the Independent Television Commission will require commercial broadcasting companies to submit advertising rate cards for approval.

Mr. Renton: Paragraph 6.47 of the White Paper envisages that the ITC will have a duty to draw up and enforce a code on advertising, and that any maximum limits on advertising minutage should be subject to Government approval. The Government will consider the formulation of legislative provisions affecting advertising regulation in the light of comments on the White Paper, and of progress in finalising the detail of the Council of Europe convention on transfrontier broadcasting.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of viewers will be able to receive Channel 5;

(2) whether he will list the geographic areas in which viewers will need to instal new aerials to receive Channel 5.

Mr. Renton: Current assessments are that 65 to 70 per cent. of the population will be able to receive Channel 5. Most viewers will require a new or additional external aerial.

Irish Republican Army (Complaints)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters he has received complaining about remarks made by (a) the Irish Republican Army, (b) supporters of the Irish Republic Army and (c) apologists for the Irish Republican Army, in the past year.

Mr. Renton: Letters of complaint are not classified under these particular categories.

BBC Licence Fee

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters he has received in the past year complaining about the level of the BBC licence fee.

Mr. Renton: Since 1 January 1988 there have been 149 letters complaining about the level of the ordinary television licence fee.

Prison Disciplinary Code

Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the new prison disciplinary code will come into operation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We aim to lay revised rules on prison disciplinary matters, including a new code of offences, in January 1989. Our intention is that these should come into force on 1 April 1989.

Prisoners

Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (i) life sentence prisoners and (ii) determinate sentence prisoners have been in prison for over 10 years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest readily available information is given in the table.

Population[1] of prisoners in prison service establishments in England and Wales on 30 June 1988 whose initial reception under sentence was 10 years or more earlier[2]

Type of sentence	Number of prisoners
	All	Recalled[3]
Life sentence	665	85
Determinate sentence	29	5

[1] The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate; detailed checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.

[2] Includes time spent on licence by prisoners recalled after having been released on licence.

[3] Prisoners who had been recalled after having been released on licence.

Prisoners (Complaints)

Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many complaints from prisoners were received by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration between 1967 and 1987; and how many of these were investigated by the Parliamentary Commissioner.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no information about complaints received by the Commissioner but records in the Department suggest that over this period he investigated some 150 complaints from prisoners.

Prison Building

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average current cost per place of prison building.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Seven new prisons are under construction, with others at varying stages of design and planning. These seven new prisons will provide some 4,042 new places at a total estimated cost, including resource and development costs, of £353·5 million at current prices. This produces an overall average cost per place of approximately £87,500. The actual costs vary according to the size, design, location, use of the prison and facilities which need to be included in a normal community, for example, workshops, hospitals and gymnasia.

Tuesday 20 December 1988

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he is making in the Government's investigations into the export to South Africa via West Germany of multi-sensor platforms containing components supplied by British Aerospace; and when he expects them to be completed.

Mrs. Chalker: As I said in my answer of 29 November, at column 185, inquiries are continuing. I hope to be in a position soon to give the right hon. Gentleman a substantive answer.

Palestine

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to Israel about the closure of academic institutions in occupied Palestine for over one year, in particular the universities of Bir-Zeit, Al-Najah, Bethlehem and the Islamic university of Gaza; and whether he will meet representatives of these institutions.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have made repeated representations to the Israelis about the closure of universities, most recently with our European partners on 23 September. Her Majesty's consul-general in Jerusalem maintains contact with representatives of these institutions.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to meet senior figures within the Palestine Liberation Organisation in order to advance the peace process in the light of the Palestine Liberation Organisation's explicit acceptance of the state of Israel; and whether he will invite the Palestine Liberation Organisation's leader, Chairman Arafat, to London for talks.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to do so.

Immigration (Interviews)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the present waiting times to first interview for all categories of applicant in each country in the Indian subcontinent.

Mr. Eggar: Settlement queues are organised as follows:

Q1 Persons with a claim to the right of abode; dependent relatives over 70 years; special compassionate cases.
Q2 All spouses; all children under 18 years.
Q3 Fiance(e)s and other first time applicants for settlement.
Q4 Re-applicants.

As at 31 October 1988 the waiting times for first interview at posts in the Indian sub-continent were:

Queue	Waiting times (months) actual	estimated
New Delhi
3	6·5	5
4	11	9
Bombay
4	10	10
Dhaka
4	23	23
Islamabad
1	4	3·5
2	11	12
3	20	18
4	20	29
Karachi
3	10	7
4	13	13

Note: There are no waiting times at Calcutta or Madras.

Actual waiting time is the time an applicant interviewed at the end of October had waited. Estimated time is the time an applicant applying at the end of October can expect to wait for interview.

Immigration (Procedures)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long a person applying for entry clearance on 31 March or the latest convenient date at each post in the Indian subcontinent could expect to wait, in each queue, for (a) first interview, (b) referral of the case to the Home Office and the requested information being received by the post, (c) decision after first interview, and (d) the explanatory statement prepared by the post in the case of appeal against any refusal to be despatched to the immigration appellate authorities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: (a) The waiting times as at 31 October were given in another reply to the hon. Member today.

(b) and (c) This information is not available. Processing times vary considerably from case to case.

(d) Average despatch times of explanatory statements from receipt of the appeal are:

Post	Settlement	Non-settlement
New Delhi	10-12 weeks	8-10 weeks
Bombay	5½ months	4½ months
Calcutta	6 weeks	6 weeks
Madras	4 weeks	4 weeks
Islamabad	5 months	2-3 months
Karachi	1 month	1 month

The information for Dhaka is not yet available. I will write to the hon. Member when it is received.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long a person applying for entry clearance for settlement at the British post in (a) Manila, (b) Accra, (c) Lagos, (d) Kingston, (e) Nicosia and (f) Cairo on 31 March or the latest convenient date could expect to wait for (i) interview, (ii) referral of the case to the Home Office and the requested information being received by the post, (iii) decisions and (iv) an explanatory statement prepared by the post in the event of an appeal against a refusal to be dispatched to the immigration appellate authorities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The information sought at (ii) and (iii) is not available. Processing times vary from case to case.

As to (i) and (iv) the position as at 16 December was as follows:

	(i)	(iv)
Manila	10 weeks	within one month
Accra	Normally same day	[1]—
Lagos	Normally same day	[1]—
Kingston	Normally same day	[1]—
Nicosia	Either immediately or within one week	none pending
Cairo	same day	maximum three weeks

[1] This information is not yet available. I will write to the hon. Member when it is received.

Trident

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with (a) the Soviet and (b) the United States' authorities concerning the provisions for verifying the numbers and locations of that part of the pooled United States Navy, Royal Navy inventory of Trident missiles which is held in Royal Navy custody, as part of a proposed United States-Soviet agreement to reduce strategic weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United States-Soviet START negotiations cover United States and Soviet strategic weapons only. The details of the verification provisions have yet to be agreed. We maintained regular contacts with both the United States and Soviet Governments on START as well as on other arms control issues. Our exchanges with the United States are particularly close and regular.

Cuba

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the current state of Anglo-Cuban relations.

Mr. Eggar: We have normal diplomatic relations with Cuba.

THE ARTS

Buildings (Access)

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he can now respond to the Carnegie council's proposal for an independently managed trust fund for the adaptation of arts buildings to make them more accessible to disabled people.

Mr. Luce: I have been impressed by the case made in the Attenborough report and by the Carnegie council for help towards improved access to arts venues for disabled people. I am therefore proposing to make a special contribution of £150,000 towards a fund for this purpose which is to be set up by the Carnegie (United Kingdom) trust. Carnegie has already announced that it is prepared to put in £250,000 subject to matching contributions from business and other sources. The details of the new arrangements will be announced by Carnegie in the new year. I very much welcome a proposal of this kind to improve access to the arts for disabled people.

I am also delighted to acknowledge the Carnegie council's support for the Museums and Galleries Commission towards the appointment of a disablement officer.

PRIME MINISTER

Bradford

Q81. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to visit Bradford.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Dartford

Q87. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Dartford.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Thank-you Letters

Q139. Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy on behalf of the Government of the day to send to citizens of the United Kingdom who do good work and good works over many years a simple letter of thanks and recognition of service.

The Prime Minister: Ministers already write to a large number of people whose work has been drawn to their attention. We gladly pay tribute to the great value of their service.

United States of America

Q162. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the total cost of her official visits to the United States of America since May 1979.

The Prime Minister: The total cost of my official visits to the United States of America since May 1979 is £323,345. (Includes the estimated cost of my visit to the United States of America in November 1988. It excludes the costs of visits to the United States of America which formed part of a more extensive itinerary. These are not readily identifiable.)

Eggs

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Prime Minister which Department's vote will carry the cost of the advertisements headed "Eggs: The Facts" inserted by Her Majesty's Government; and whether a supplementary estimate will be placed before Parliament to cover it.

The Prime Minister: The cost of advertising will be met jointly by the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. It will be the subject of supplementary estimates.

Foreign Visits

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West of 8 December, Official Report, column 267, what she considers a reasonable length of time to keep open accounts relating to her visits overseas; and how many accounts remain open after (a) one year, (b) two years and (c) more than two years.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to my answer of 8 December at column 267.

Engagements

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 20 December.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 20 December.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 20 December.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 20 December.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 20 December.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 20 December.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 20 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Grants (Manufacturing Companies)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will ask list the grants available from his Department and the criteria by which they are awarded for manufacturing companies resident in Nottingham.

Mr. Atkins: Consultancy initiative. Independent firms or groups with a payroll of fewer than 500, can benefit from the enterprise initiative which offers financial support for between five and 15 man-days' specialist consultancy in a number of key management functions such as marketing, design, quality, manufacturing systems, business planning and financial and information systems. In the Nottingham urban programme area DTI will pay two-thirds of the cost of the consultancy projects, whereas outside that area the Department will pay half.

Assistance for exceptional projects. Each year a handful of projects (nationally) benefit from this scheme which is available on a selective basis towards investment of research and development projects with eligible costs of at least £500,000 and which are viable and would not go ahead in the United Kingdom without assistance. Such projects must be likely to lead to exceptional national benefits. Grants of up to half the agreed costs can be made available to firms for collaborative research programmes conducted jointly by more than one organisation such as industrial and commercial firms, universities and polytechnics, research and technology organisations and Government research laboratories.

All firms in Nottingham are also eligible for assistance under the various export services some of which can provide financial assistance.

Satellite Dishes

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will consider the abolition of the licence currently required on the purchase of television satellite dish signal receiving units.

Mr. Atkins: My Department is currently reviewing the licensing requirements under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 for virtually all receive-only apparatus, including reception equipment for television broadcasts direct to the home from fixed-service satellites (TVRO equipment). This review will not however affect the licence required for domestic television sets. My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry expects to make a statement shortly.

Drink-driving

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in discussions with the insurance industry about the ending of insurance policies against the consequences of disqualification for drink-driving offences.

Mr. Maude: The Association of British Insurers has offered on behalf of members and non-members of the association an agreement whereby the insurers at present writing these policies will cease to offer new contracts after 31 December 1988. The agreement will extend to all policies which cover the policyholder for the consequences of disqualification from driving for alcohol or drug related offences. Existing policies will be phased out after 31 December 1990.

The Government welcome this offer, and have accepted it. The Government will, however, be prepared to introduce legislation on this subject if for any reason the agreement is not successful in bringing the issue of these policies to an end.

Rechargeable Batteries

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what initiatives he plans to take domestically or at European Community level, to encourage the use of rechargeable batteries.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 19 December 1988]: I have no plans for initiatives to encourage the use of rechargeable batteries.

North Peckham Task Force

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give details of expenditure by the north Peckham task force, occurring outside its defined boundary, in terms of both the amount of expenditure, and the project funded.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 19 December 1988]: It is not possible to provide this information in the form requested.

All projects supported by the north Peckham task force are designed to benefit directly or indirectly the inhabitants of the north Peckham task force area. However, many projects result in some expenditure being made outside the task force area because of the need to provide services, equipment or materials which are not available from within the area.

Multipoint Video Distribution System

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster at what frequency the multipoint video distribution system will operate.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 19 December 1988]: As our recent White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality" makes clear, the Government have not reached a decision on which frequency band or bands should be made available for the local delivery of programme services by multipoint video distribution systems (MVDS). The White Paper sets out some of the perceived advantages and disadvantages attaching to various possible bands, and invites comments on this and other aspects by February 1989. The Government are committed to making their intentions clear by, at the latest, the end of April 1989.

Foreign Shareholdings

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, further to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 139, there has been any conclusion to the discussions between his Department and the EEC Commissioner on the compatibility of the 15 per cent. limit on foreign shareholdings with the treaty of Rome.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 19 December 1988]: No. Discussions with the European Commission are continuing.

Caravans (Smoke Detectors)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in fitting smoke detectors to new caravans as foreshadowed in the statement made by the Under-Secretary of State on 29 June.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 19 December 1988]: I have been informed that the technical committee of the National Caravan Council has established a specification for a smoke detector suitable for operation in the restricted environment of a caravan, and that the manufacturer members, trade members and para members of the council have accepted the undertaking that all new and used caravans sold after 1 May 1989 will be fitted with smoke detectors. This is welcome confirmation of the statement of intent which my predecessor reported to the House on 29 June, and I am happy that the caravan industry is making this important contribution to safety.

Copra

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if copra exports from Christmas Island have been monitored for radioactivity; to which countries copra has been exported; and how such consignments have been checked for contamination.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

Exports of copra from Christmas Island have not been monitored for radioactivity by the British Government. Extensive environmental monitoring showed that no indigenous products were likely to have been affected to any significant extent by surface radioactivity.

TRANSPORT

Identity Cards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has investigated, or is currently studying, the usefulness of a national identity card to his departmental responsibilities; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 15 December at columns 1080-82.

Network SouthEast

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of British Rail, Network SouthEast; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I frequently meet representatives of British Rail's Network SouthEast and discuss a very wide range of issues.

A46-A47 Link Road

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to visit Leicester to see the route of the proposed A46-A47 link road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The A46-A47 link road is a local authority scheme which is the responsibility of Leicestershire county council as highway authority.

A1 (Lamberton Toll)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to redevelop the A1 trunk route at Lamberton toll on the English-Scottish border; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's northern regional office has a number of options under consideration for the improvement of the A1 trunk road near to the English-Scottish border. It is possible that the preferred scheme may extend into Scotland. There are discussions with the Scottish Development Department and further meetings are planned. On current planning a preferred scheme should be announced by early summer 1989.

Announcements (Underground)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications for passenger safety on the London underground of unintelligible or inaudible announcements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The statutory responsibility for underground safety rests with London Regional Transport. However, I understand that it has accepted and is pursuing recommendation 110 of the Fennell report that the quality and scope of public address equipment should be improved and cover a wider area of stations.

Ports

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action is being taken by Her Majesty's Government in the period leading up to 1992 to ensure that Britain's ports can compete on a fair and equal basis with their European rivals.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) on 6 December at columns 97-8.

Newcastle Airport

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which cities on the continent in European Economic Community countries are served by direct air services from Newcastle; and what was the level of provision when Britain joined the European Economic Community.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are currently direct air services from Newcastle to three cities within the EEC—Amsterdam, Dublin and Paris. When Britain joined the EEC, there were direct services to Amsterdam, Copenhagen and Dublin.

Hunting (Rail Hazards)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the safety implications of recent incidents of hunts trespassing on to railway lines.

Mr. Portillo: I am advised that the presence of foxhounds on railway track is most unlikely to involve any danger to trains or their passengers. It is for huntsmen to ensure that horses do not stray onto railways and to exercise control over hounds.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list incidents reported by British Rail under accident reporting procedures of trains (a) delayed or (b) forced to halt as a result of hunts trespassing on to railway lines over the last two years.

Mr. Portillo: There have been no such incidents reported to my Department by British Rail under the statutory reporting procedures.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many hounds participating in hunts have been killed by trains while crossing railway lines during hunts over the last two years.

Mr. Portillo: The hon. Member should approach the British Railways board for these details.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from (a) the New Forest Foxhounds, (b) the Bicester and Whaddon Chase Foxhounds and (c) the Cattistock Foxhounds regarding the killing of hounds by British Rail trains; what compensation is payable in such cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received no such representations. The question of compensation payable to persons involved in rail incidents is a matter for the railways board.

M1 (Safety)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents were reported on the stretch of four lane motorway on the south bound carriageway of the M1 north of junction four for the periods when the road markings were showing the additional lane as an offside lane for fast moving vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the road surface markings and signs relating thereto on the southbound carriageway of the M1 north of junction 4 on the stretch of four-lane motorway were (a) initially altered to show the use of an additional offside lane for fast moving vehicles and (b) altered again to show instead the use of an additional nearside lane for slow moving vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The initial signing arrangement was based on signing of diverge lanes for faster traffic elsewhere. It was not successful on this stretch of the M1. It has therefore been changed.

Railways (Safety)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve safety on the railways.

Mr. Portillo: I am obviously concerned that safety on the railways should be of the highest order. The law places upon the British Railways Board and the operators of other statutory railway undertakings an obligation to run their services safely. The railway inspectorate, which advises Ministers on railway safety matters, keeps closely in touch with the railway operators on all aspects of safety. In the light of the Fennell report, the railway inspectorate is considering whether it can improve the way in which this is done.

London Underground (Crime)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of the recommendations in the 1986 report, "Crime on the London Underground", have been implemented.

Mr. Portillo: All the recommendations for action by London Underground Limited are being implemented, some on an experimental basis in pilot projects. The recommendations concerning the organisation of the British transport police are for the Police Committee.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received a costed programme from London Regional Transport of the measures recommended in the report, "Crime on the London Underground".

Mr. Portillo: My Department receives regular reports from London Underground Limited on expenditure committed and planned from the £15 million that the Government have made available for the implementation of the measures recommended in the report.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the Civil Aviation Authority's advice on strategies for making good use of the air traffic control capacity in the period up to 1995.

Mr. Channon: I received the advice at the end of November. The authority is publishing it today and copies are being placed in the Library.

I welcome the advice, which contains a clear statement of the steps that the national air traffic services are taking to improve the provision of air traffic control services pending the significant increase in capacity which will result from the reorganisation of the London terminal area airspace due to be completed in 1995. The advice also explains the important initiatives that the United Kingdom has been taking internationally to increase co-operation and co-ordination between air traffic control authorities in Europe.

The Government's public expenditure plans announced in the autumn, already make provision for a two thirds increase in the authority's investment next year. The Government will continue to approve individual projects within the authority's investment programme where they are financially justified, as in the past. The Government also fully support the authority in introducing flexible working practices and in increasing recruitment of air traffic controllers to handle growing traffic levels.

I look to the chairman of the authority to pursue the strategy vigorously. I have asked him to consider any new ideas that may be put to him and to take further steps to relieve air traffic control congestion where these prove practicable.

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has yet updated its 1986 air traffic forecasts; and if he will make a statement about airport capacity in the south-east.

Mr. Channon: My Department is today publishing fresh forecasts of passenger demand at United Kingdom airports. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the House Libraries.

The latest forecasts cover the period to 2005. For United Kingdom airports they predict higher volumes of traffic than those estimated in 1986, with a significant increase in the proportion of passengers using regional airports, whose share is projected to rise from 33 per cent. to over 37 per cent. Continuing strong growth is expected both at London and at regional airports, relying on the availability of sufficient air traffic control capacity. This reflects among other factors the sustained economic performance of this country and our strength in business and tourism. The new forecasts take account on the one hand of lower air fares which are expected to result from further liberalisation; and on the other of the effects of the Channel tunnel.

In the 1985 White Paper "Airports Policy" (Cmnd 9542) the Government stated that one of the objectives towards which United Kingdom airports policy should be directed was the fostering of a strong and competitive British airline industry through the provision of enough airport capacity where it is needed. In respect of the London airports the White Paper concluded that the developments then in hand or planned should provide both sufficient capacity to meet air transport demand in the south-east into the mid 1990s, and the necessary flexibility to enable decisions to be taken at the appropriate time for any development needed thereafter. On regional airports my predecessors and I have consistently affirmed our encouragement for their maximum use and development to meet demand arising locally, and have said we look to them to attract more traffic and so help with the pressure on the south-east.

The Government's commitment has most recently been evidenced by my announcement yesterday of capital expenditure allocations for municipal airports and public airport companies for 1989-90 totalling £23 million. These include an allocation towards the cost of the first phase of a major new passenger terminal at Manchester airport, thus allowing the airport company to proceed.

Earlier this year I judged that the time had come to review the strategy set out in the White Paper in the light of subsequent events. I therefore asked the Civil Aviation Authority for formal recommendations, under section 16(2) of the Civil Aviation Act 1982, on the United Kingdom airport capacity needed to cope with demand through to 2005. At the same time, I asked the authority for interim advice on strategies for making good use of the available air traffic control capacity until the planned reorganisation of the London terminal area (LTMA) airspace produces additional capacity in 1995. I received the authority's interim advice at the end of last month and it is being published by the authority today. The authority's main advice is due in July of next year and I shall neither take nor endorse any decisions on airport capacity until I have considered that advice.

The present outlook is as follows. Although Heathrow and Gatwick are now operating for much of the time at close to the capacity of their runways, their passenger throughput can be expected to go on increasing gradually over the years with the growth in size of aircraft and with some further peak-spreading. Moreover, the London area still has substantial spare runway capacity at Stansted. The runway there is at present handling only about 1 million passengers per annum, though its potential capacity is of the order of 25 million passengers per annum. Runways at Luton and London City airports and at other existing airports accessible to passengers to and from the south-east can also be expected to make some contribution to the handling of London's traffic growth. But of course runway capacity cannot be realised without improvements in airspace capacity over south-eastern England, and the corresponding development of sufficient passenger terminal capacity.

In its interim advice on airspace strategies, the CAA explains that in 1995, with the completion of the planned reorganisation of London terminal area airspace, it expects LTMA air traffic control capacity to be adequate to handle the runway capacities of Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted, in addition to 16 movements per hour at Luton.

As to terminal capacity, a number of new developments are either planned or possible. The first phase of Stansted's new terminal is already under construction and is planned to open in 1991. Outline planning permission has been given for completion of the terminal to a capacity of 15 million passengers per annum, though parliamentary approval would be needed to raise the current limit on air transport movements at the airport. Moreover, as envisaged in the 1985 White Paper, further terminal development to the capacity of Stansted's runway would also be possible, subject to planning permission and to Parliament's decision over the airport's current air transport movement limit. The White Paper also left open the possibility of a fifth passenger terminal at Heathrow; again, any proposal would be subject to planning permission.

There are therefore a number of ways in which airport capacity in the south-east can continue to meet demand, without the commissioning of new runways. I now await the CAA's main advice, due in July. Meanwhile, in view of the long lead-times necessary for seeking planning approval and for construction, it is right that those responsible for operating and developing airports should review the options for any new terminal developments that traffic forecasts indicate are likely to be needed.

London Regional Transport (Finance)

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the external financing limit for London Regional Transport.

Mr. Portillo: The external financing limit for London Regional Transport for the current financial year has been increased by £54 million to £275 million to allow for additional safety-related expenditure following the fire at King's Cross and the purchase of Victoria coach station from the National Bus Company. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Travellers Fare

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his proposals for the future arrangements in respect of Travellers Fare.

Mr. Portillo: I am pleased to announce that, following a recommendation from the British Railways Board, the Secretary of State has given his consent under section 1 of the Transport Act 1981 to the board's sale of Travellers Fare Limited, its station catering subsidiary, to a new company formed by the Travellers Fare management.

The board's choice of the Travellers Fare management as the new owners follows a competitive tender exercise. The management will be setting up an employee share ownership plan in the new year. I wish the management and staff of Travellers Fare success in the private sector.

Road Development

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his policy on the control of development on motorways and other trunk roads in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Department of Transport Circular 4/88 and Welsh Office Circular 42/88 set out the general policy which will guide the Departments in exercising their powers of direction under the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988, and in advising local planning authorities on the implications of development proposals for trunk roads.

Trunk roads are designed primarily to further the safe and free flow of long distance through traffic. This necessitates limiting the numbers of junctions and accesses. No direct accesses to motorways are allowed other than for service area and related facilities.

In the case of other trunk roads, development of suitable sites to provide services for motorists is to be encouraged in areas where the necessary services are lacking, and it will not be appropriate to exercise the same severity of restriction on some of the older trunk roads as in relation to the newer high standard ones.

In all cases the implications of development for traffic on the trunk road should be taken into account in decisions on planning applications. This also applies to development at or near to junctions with trunk roads.

It is important to take into account the extent to which traffic generated by development may use up in whole or part the residual capacity of trunk roads or junctions with them. That aspect is of particular concern in relation to the more heavily used roads such as M25.

In cases where the developer considers that the traffic implications of development can be made acceptable by works which he is willing to fund, he is recommended to seek an early meeting with the Department concerned to explore the scope for an agreement under section 278 of the Highways Act 1980. Agreements cannot be used to cover departures from the general ban on accesses to motorways, or for multiplying access points on other trunk roads contrary to the policy in the circular.

They may be appropriate in circumstances where new or modified access arrangements to departmental standards would be acceptable from a road safety and traffic management standpoint, and the developer is willing to pay in whole or part for these and other improvements to deal with traffic generated by the development. Where such improvements are in prospect, it may be appropriate to impose a condition on the planning permission delaying implementation of the development until they are effective.

We shall shortly issue a guidance notice on section 278 agreements.

Transport Police

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the independent inspection of the British Transport police by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 19 December at columns 9-10.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current complement of British Transport police officers; and how many are on duty on average each day within the London Underground system.

Mr. Portillo: The current national complement of the British Transport police is 1,918. The complement of the division responsible for the London underground is 350. On an average day 162 of the division's officers are deployed, on a three shift basis, on the underground network.

Bus Licensing

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals are being advanced by the European Commission to the Council of Ministers on the procedure for licensing bus services within the Community after 1992; and what is his assessment of the effect of these proposals on United Kingdom bus operators with services to the continent.

Mr. Portillo: The Commission has submitted proposals to liberalise and simplify some of the rules governing international bus and coach services in the Community, and to permit road passenger transport cabotage. The proposals have still to be agreed, and envisage a more far-reaching proposal by 1990. United Kingdom coach operators would be subject to more intensive competition in certain areas and would benefit from the increased opportunities which deregulation would bring.

London Underground (Security)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of recent murders and attacks on London Underground, he will give details of any proposals to improve security on public transport in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: [holding answer 15 December 1988]: London Regional Transport has accepted the recommendation of Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary that the complement of the London underground division of the British Transport police should be increased from 350 to 400 officers. LRT will be discussing the implementation of this recommendation with the British Transport police committee and the Chief Constable with the objective of bringing the division up to the new complement by the end of the 1989-90 financial year. The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and the Commissioner of the City of London Police will be consulted as to how best they, in conjunction with the British Transport police, could provide additional officers as quickly as possible for policing the underground while the new British Transport police officers are being recruited and trained.

The increased manpower will facilitate further extension of the local area policing concept successfully piloted in the Stockwell area and will increase the police presence on the underground generally. London Underground Limited is implementing the recommendations of the Department of Transport's report of November 1986 on "Crime on the Underground" through a programme of passenger security measures for which the Government have made £15 million available. As part of this programme it has today commissioned a new underground communications network which will enable the use of police radio at 42 deep-level stations. The passenger security programme also includes installation at a number of stations of "Help Point" booths, intercom/alarm panels, enhanced closed circuit television monitoring and improved lighting.

SCOTLAND

Identity Cards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department has investigated, or is currently studying, the usefulness of a national identity card to his departmental responsibilities; and whether he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department gave on 15 December in response to a question from the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) about this matter. My right hon. and learned Friend has asked the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland) for its views on the introduction of national identity cards and the association's response is awaited.

Community Charge

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will introduce regulations to restrict the copying of an extract of the community charge register when a copy is taken for a purpose wholly unconnected with the community charge.

Mr. Lang: No.

Transplant Surgery

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) heart, (b) cornea, (c) liver, (d) pancreas, (e) kidney and (f) lung transplants were carried out in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Only corneal and kidney transplants are carried out in Scotland. Scottish figures for these are as follows:

	Corneal	Kidney
1977	98	67
1978	95	81
1979	75	59
1980	96	90
1981	106	70
1982	106	104
1983	116	132
1984	129	149
1985	167	126
1986	142	125
1987	100	116

Anti-smoking Campaigns

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what expenditure his Department made on anti-smoking campaigns, other than grants to ASH and the Scottish Health Education Group, in the current financial year; and what are planned in 1989-90;

(2) what is the total expenditure by the Scottish Health Education Group on anti-smoking campaigns in the current financial year;

(3) what expenditure he intends to make on anti-smoking campaigns in 1989-90;

(4) what grant his Department made to Action on Smoking and Health in the current financial year ; and what it will be in 1989-90;

(5) what proportion of the Scottish Health Education Group's budget is spent on anti-smoking campaigns in the current financial year; and proportion he expects to spend in 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Health Education Group has allocated the sum of £247,000 for anti-smoking measures during the current financial year. This allocation represents 9 per cent. of the group's total publicity budget. The Scottish Committee for Action on Smoking and Health will receive an annual grant-in-aid from the Scottish Home and Health Department of £34,000 in the current financial year. Specific allocations concerning National Health Service expenditure in Scotland for 1989-90 have not yet been finalised. No other anti-smoking campaigns are being funded by the Scottish Home and Health Department at present.

Scottish Health Education Group

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to appoint a fund raiser to the Scottish Health Education Group to encourage an increase in the group's income from non-governmental sources.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Health Education Group is considering how any additional funds which non-Governmen sources might be willing to contribute could be directed into health education. I will ask the group to let me have views on my hon. Friend's suggestion.

Timber

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his estimates of the expected annual growth in timber production assuming present forestry policies are maintained until the year 2000.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Current annual timber production in Great Britain is 6·1 million cu. m. This is expected to rise to about 9 million cu. m. by the year 2000.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his estimates of the expected annual growth in the apparent consumption of timber and timber derivatives until the year 2000.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 December 1988]: The FAO's European timber trends study, published in 1986, forecasts an annual growth in the apparent consumption of timber and timber derivatives in the United Kingdom from now until the year 200 of about 2 per cent.

M77

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in the light of the opposition expressed to the proposed M77 extention, he will halt its construction.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A public local inquiry into objections to the A77 Ayr road route proposals was held in Glasgow earlier this year. The reporter has recently submitted part I of his report and I expect the full report to be completed early next year. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will decide whether or not the road improvement should go ahead when he has considered the full report.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the average number of people resident in Scotland per National Health Service hospital bed for the years 1978 to 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The ratio of people to beds is set out below on the basis of the registrar general's mid-year estimates of population and the average number of available staffed beds in the years ending 31 March.

	Number
1978	87·9
1979	88·1
1980	88·6
1981	88·6
1982	89·4
1983	90·5
1984	89·8
1985	90·6
1986	91·8
1987	92·5
1988	93·8

Hazardous Waste

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the names and addresses of all the sites in Scotland which are approved for the disposal and dumping of hazardous and toxic wastes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton Twenty-two landfill waste disposal sites authorised to accept significant quantities of hazardous and toxic wastes are listed in the table. Other sites may be authorised by the 56 Scottish waste disposal authorities, the district and islands councils, to accept hazardous and toxic wastes but under conditions which limit their significance.

Young Offenders (Training)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has carried out any evaluation of the SACRO Strathclyde ESF training scheme for young offenders; if he will consider funding similar schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The funding for this scheme was arranged by Strathclyde regional council and it does not therefore fall to my right hon. and learned Friend to carry out any evaluation. He would, of course, be interested to see the outome of any evaluation carried out by the regional council.

Motorway Crash Barriers

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to complete the installation of central crash barriers on every motorway in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At present there are 145 miles of motorway in Scotland, of which 41 miles have central barriers. The existing motorway network has been constructed by successive Governments since the mid-1960s, some sections with central barriers, others without. It is our policy to provide central barriers on all new and existing motorways and this will be done as quickly as available resources permit.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1988 reported by the national museums and galleries in Scotland, broken down into the individual institutions, including their outstations, with figures in each case of the percentage change on the attendance figures for 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Attendance figures for the calendar year 1988 are not yet available.

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of those companies which have received regional development grants of under £25,000 in each of the past five years.

Mr. Lang: Information about the payments over £25,000 is published in British Business, but is not collated for payments below that figure because of disporportionate cost.

Fish Farming

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he can now give any information as to the results of research carried out by his Department's marine laboratory concerning the incidence of plankton blooms on the west coast and their effect upon fish farming operations; what steps he proposes to take in response to their conclusions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Findings of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's marine laboratory analysis of algal blooms which occurred this year are to be published next year. I will send a copy to the hon. Member in due course.

Longer-term research by the marine laboratory into the causes and spread of algal bloom in waters of the west coast of Scotland and in Shetland will take several years to complete.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the latest figures on hospital waiting lists by area and speciality in Scotland in the manner set out in the information deposited in response to the question from the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) Official Report, column 810, on 21 July.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest available information on hospital waiting lists in the form requested is published in table 2 in the Statistical Bulletin 1/88, "Waiting List Figures for 31 March 1988", copies of which are held in the Library.

Adult Education

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has reached a conclusion on the funding of an adult basic education project in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have agreed the suggestion of the Scottish Community Education Council that I provide "learning shop" in Whitfield, Dundee. I hope that this initiative will provide valuable lessons for adult basic education in Scotland.

Prisons Inspectorate

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received from Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons for Scotland his annual report for 1987.

Mr. Rifkind: I have received Her Majesty's inspector of prisons for Scotland's annual report for 1987. I have today placed copies of the report in the Library, and I am sending a copy to the chairman of the Scottish parliamentary all-party penal affairs group and to other interested bodies. Copies may also be purchased from my Department.

Farming (Subsidies)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the level of subsidies received by West German farmers from their national Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The information is contained in the annal agriculture report prepared by the federal Government. The 1988 edition was published in February of this year.

Tobacco Industry

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by how many employment has declined in the tobacco manufacturing industry in Scotland since 1979.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The information requested is not available for publication as this would disclose information about individual companies.

Electricity

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to secure publication of the methods of calculation used by the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board to establish the tariffs charged for the purchase of privately generated electricity under section 10(1) of the Electricity Act 1983.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 8 December 1988]: The calculation of tariffs is a matter for the board and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he proposes to take to deal with lack of capacity in Welsh medium schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There remains in Wales considerable surplus capacity in schools resulting from falling numbers of pupils. Where there is insufficient capacity in existing Welsh-medium schools to meet parental demands for Welsh-medium education, I would encourage local education authorities to take steps to reorganise their provision so as to meet the demand. It is for LEAs to initiate proposals for such schemes. Gross provision for local authority capital expenditure on education was increased by 42 per cent. between 1985-86 and 1988-89. Next year provision will be increased by a further 11 per cent. to £52·9 million. One of the main objectives of these increases has been to encourage rationalisation.

Rural Development Commission

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to establish in Wales a commission which has the same powers in rural areas as the Rural Development Commission in England.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No.

Eggs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to compensate those egg producers in Wales who have suffered a significant reduction in sales as a result of allegations of salmonella infection.

Mr. Peter Walker: My right hon. Friend, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, announced to the House on Monday 19 December 1988 the terms of an £18 million compensation scheme for the egg industry. The scheme comprises two measures. The first will provide a payment to egg packers for the destruction of surplus eggs for a period of four weeks from 21 December. The second measure will enable up to 4 million hens to be culled to help the industry reduce the size of the egg laying flock.

These measures apply equally to the egg industry in Wales and England.

Primary Schools

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Department issues any guidance to local education authorities concerning making available to head teachers of primary schools the names and addresses of three and four-year-olds within the local education authority area who may be potential pupils for those schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Arrangements of that kind would generally be a matter for individual LEAs. Welsh Office Circular 5/83 on "Assessments and Statements of Special Educational Needs" gives advice about the admission to school of children under five with special education needs. It asks LEAs to give priority to such children when admitting children to nursery schools and classes; and it draws attention to the need for co-operation with social service departments and health authorities in bringing such children to the attention of the LEA.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer, Official Report, 12 December, column 395, what information his Department has concerning the number of planning appeal decisions in national parks in Wales which were (a) allowed, (b) dismissed, (c) withdrawn and (d) undetermined in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 2 December at column 419. Statistics are kept concerning planning applications in national parks in Wales, but not planning appeal decisions. I am arranging for information about appeals to be collated from the beginning of 1989.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Darling: To ask the Attorney-General if he will provide a table showing the number of appeals to immigration adjudicators allowed and dismissed in 1987 and the first quarter of 1988 broken down according to the nationality of the appellant and the type of decision appealed against.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is set out in the tables.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which organisations involved in promoting small businesses he expects to meet during his discussions prior to his 1989 Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has not been asked to meet any organisations involved solely in promoting small businesses. Each year my right hon. Friend receives many requests for meetings and whilst it is not possible for him to meet everyone, all representations are considered most carefully in the run up to the Budget.

Cigarettes (Duty)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on the retail prices index if duty on cigarettes was raised by (a) five pence, (b) 10 pence and (c) 15 pence for a pack of 20 cigarettes.

Mr. Lilley: It is estimated that the effect on the retail prices index would be as follows:

Price increase per 20 cigarettes	Effect on RPI Per cent.
5 pence	0·1
10 pence	0·2
15 pence	0·3

Payroll Giving

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax revenue he estimated would be forgone under the payroll giving scheme for 1987-88 and 1988-89 at the time of the launch of the scheme; and if he will make a statement on the progress of the scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The payroll giving scheme was announced in the March 1986 Budget. The financial statement and Budget report issued at that time noted that the cost of the new relief would depend on take-up but that it could reach £20 million in 1987-88. No estimate for 1988-89 was made. In practice the initial take-up was lower, but about 3,200 schemes have now been set up and the number of participants is continuing to increase.

International Tax Convention

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the United Kingdom proposes to sign the joint Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and Council of Europe convention on mutual administrative assistance in tax matters which was opened for signature on 25 January.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Earlier this year, I invited representative bodies who had expressed an interest in this matter, together with any other interested parties, to express their views on whether the United Kingdom should sign this convention and, if so, with what reservations. I am grateful to those who responded and have given very careful consideration to all the views which were expressed.

The Government recognise the value which is rightly attached to international co-operation among fiscal authorities and the need to make adequate and effective arrangements to this end which are fair to taxpayers and the Revenue authorities concerned. Such co-operation plays an important part in ensuring the proper determination of tax liabilities on an international level. However, in view of the existing provisions for mutual assistance in this area provided, for example, by our extensive network of double taxation treaties and our European obligations, we have concluded that the United Kingdom need not become a party to the convention.

Tax Thresholds

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) by how much tax thresholds have increased in real terms between 1979-80 and 1988-89;

(2) how many people have been removed from paying income tax as a result of the raising of tax thresholds between 1979-80 and 1988-89;

(3) how much extra tax would (a) a single person and (b) a married couple with two children who have been taken out of paying income tax by the raising of thresholds be paying if tax thresholds had been increased in line with inflation.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 December 1988]: Between 1979-80 and 1988-89, the single person's income tax allowance increased by 22 per cent. in real terms and the married man's allowance by 23 per cent. in real terms.

It is estimated that about 670,000 fewer single people and married couples are liable to income tax in 1988-89 compared with those who would be liable if 1979-80 allowances had been indexed for inflation to 1988-89 according to the statutory indexation provisions. With the basic rate at 25p, a single person has gained up to £1·35 per week and a married man up to £2·26 per week from the increases in allowances compared with indexation.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much a tax unit on the 40 per cent. tax rate would currently receive in mortgage interest tax relief on a mortgage of £30,000.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 December 1988]: In 1988-89, if current mortgage interest rates remain unchanged, a higher rate taxpayer with a typical £30,000 mortgage would receive mortgage interest tax relief of £1,390.

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make it his policy to forward communications sent to him from the investigation department of the Salvation Army on behalf of families seeking missing relatives to those relatives.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 December 1988]: If the person concerned can be traced from the information provided, the Inland Revenue does forward letters in such cases.

Share Options

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to increase the limits on savings-related share option schemes for employees.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The operation of approved employee share schemes is kept under constant review. We shall continue to examine sympathetically the wide variety of proposals made for improvements in this area, to see how far they are capable of building on the impressive progress in employee share ownership which has already been achieved.

Personal Borrowing

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what, at the last available date, was the amount on a per capita basis of the net borrowings of the personal sector in (a) the whole of the United Kingdom, (b) the south east of England, (c) the south west of England, (d) the north west of England, (e) the north of England, (f) Scotland and (g) Wales.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 16 December 1988]: There is no single agreed definition of "net borrowings" on which an answer can be based. Some relevant information may be found in statistical publications in the Library of the House. Balance sheet information on the United Kingdom personal sector is given in "Financial Statistics", table 14.4. The latest edition is for November 1988. More detailed but slightly less timely information is shown in "United Kingdom National Accounts"—the blue book —1988 edition, table 11.2. Similar information in terms of financial transactions rather than amounts outstanding is given in "Financial Statistics", tables 1.10, 9.2 and 9.3.

I regret that these data are not available on a regional basis.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Remand Cells

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name the person who reports to his Department on the conditions under which people are held in police station cells or magistrate court cells; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The conditions in which prisoners are held in police stations and magistrates court cells are the responsibility of the chief officers of the police forces concerned. Chief officers are not required to report to my right hon. Friend on the operational aspects of their work, but we are very well aware of their concerns. Strenuous and successful efforts are being made to reduce reliance on police cells for housing people who ought to be in prison.

Lay visitors schemes are operating in most of the London boroughs. Lay visitors have access to police station and magistrates court cells and they may report to my right hon. Friend on the conditions for prisoners held there.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police stations cells and magistrate court cells in England and Wales in which people on remand are held.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Records of which police stations and magistrates court cells are being used by the police to hold remand prisoners are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. On 12 December, prisoners were held in cells belonging to the following police forces:

Bedfordshire
Cheshire
City of London
Essex
Greater Manchester
Hampshire
Hertfordshire
Humberside
Kent
Lancashire
Leicestershire
Merseyside
Metropolitan South Yorkshire
Surrey
Sussex
Thames Valley
Warwickshire
West Midlands
West Yorkshire

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of people being held on remand in police station cells or magistrate court cells on 6 December.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 6 December, 945 persons, most of whom would have been on remand, were held in police or magistrates court cells in England and Wales.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the procedures under which a person being held on remand in police station cells or magistrate court cells can make complaints on the conditions in which they are being held; and how many complaints have been made in the last three years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Prisoners may make complaints about the conditions of their detention to the custody officer at the police station or magistrates court in which they are held. Any such complaints received will be reported to the chief officer of the police force concerned. Prisoners may also complain to lay visitors to police stations and magistrates court cells in London, who may convey such complaints to the chief officer via the officer in charge at the police station or court.

Records of the number of complaints made are not available.

Racial Harassment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to encourage local authorities to take a more active role in countering racial harassment; whether he will make funds available for this purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Government believe that it is important that vigorous and visible action is taken to combat racial harassment.

The ministerial group on crime prevention is considering a report by an interdepartmental working group which has examined ways in which the police and local authorities might improve their response to racial harassment within their existing resources.

National Disaster Centre

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce a national disaster/emergency centre to co-ordinate the supply of information.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 15 December at column 699.

Abortion (Inquests)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the procedures adopted in determining whether inquests should be held on the deaths of babies discovered alive following an abortion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evenett) on 15 December 1988 at column 711.

Vehicle Clamping

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many vehicles have been clamped since the introduction of the clamping procedures.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the commissioner that a total of 353,106 vehicles were clamped by the Metropolitan police between 15 May 1983, when clamping operations began, and 31 October 1988.

Football (Offenders)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the convicted criminals who have received exclusion orders during the last twelve months have been caught re-offending by attempting to enter a football ground.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available.

Compensation (Metropolitan Police)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much in compensation, both in court and in out of court settlements, the Metropolitan police has paid to members of the public who have brought civil cases for damages against them in each of the years 1985 to 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the amounts paid by the Metropolitan police under awards made by the courts and in settlements out of court arising from allegations of wrongful acts by Metropolitan police officers are as folows:

	Awards made by the courts £	Settlements out of court £
1985	13,949	193,588
1986	46,836	330,332
1987	11,233	173,714
1988[1]	101,535	231,726

[1] To 15 December.

Leicestershire Constabulary

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statememt on his response to requests from the Leicestershire police authority for an increase in the force establishment of the Leicestershire constabulary.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend is not yet in a position to announce his decision on the Leicestershire application, and others, for more police posts. He hopes to do so soon.

Prison Visits

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visits prisoners at Camp Hill prison are allowed per month; and what is the average duration of those visits.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Prisoners at Camp Hill are allowed two visits per month. The average duration of visits is one hour 30 minutes.

Deportation

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) decisions to deport and (b) deportation orders were authorised in each quarter of 1988 to the latest available date; and how many people left the United Kingdom under supervised departure in each quarter of 1988 to the latest available date.

Mr. Renton: The available information is contained in table 14 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 38/88 "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Third Quarter 1988" which was published on 15 December.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate when, and under which statutory provision, he delegated his powers to issue notices of intention to deport persons, to issue restriction orders, to detain and to authorise supervised departures to officers of the immigration service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Except where specifically provided otherwise, it is well understood that powers conferred on a Minister by statute can be exercised on his behalf by his officials. The Immigration Act 1971 clearly distinguishes between the powers of the Secretary of State (including, therefore, officials acting on his behalf) and those of an immigration officer. Nevertheless, it is possible for the Secretary of State to delegate his powers to a senior member of his staff in the immigration service who is not, in his capacity as an immigration officer, involved in the case in question. Where potential deportees under section 3(5)(a) are traced by the immigration service, my right hon. Friend decided, on this basis, and with effect from 1 August 1988, to delegate his powers to issue a notice of intention to deport, to issue a restriction order, to detain and to authorise supervised departure to members of the immmigration service at not less than inspector level.

Immigration Applications

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time taken to process applications for (a) registration and (b) naturalisation; and how long those applying in both of those categories in December 1987 can expect to wait.

Mr. Renton: The latest available information about processing times was contained in the reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 30 November at column 247. It is not possible to give a reliable forecast of how long applications for naturalisation received in the month of December 1987 will take to complete, but all applications for registration received by the end of 1987 will have been completed by April 1990 and many of them will have been completed well before then.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for settlement by wives and children in (i) Dhaka and (ii) Islamabad were (a) received, (b) granted, (c) refused, (d) deferred at first interview, (e) lapsed and (f) outstanding and awaiting first interview for each quarter since the beginning of 1987.

Mr. Renton: Information up to the first quarter was published in the Official Report, columns 647-50, in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 20 July 1988. Corresponding information for the second and third quarters of 1988 is given in the table.

[3] Referred to Home Office for decision or deferred for further inquiries.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance as (a) wives, (b) husbands, (c) fiancés and (d) fiancées in each British post in (1) Kingston, Jamaica, (2) Manila, (3) Hong Kong, (4) Washington DC, (5) Ghana and (6) Nigeria were (i) granted and (ii) refused in each quarter since January 1987; how many such applications in each category, at each post and in each quarter were refused (a) wholly and (b) partly because of the primary purpose rule; what was the refusal rate at each post; and what percentage of those refusals were (x) wholly and (y) partly on primary purpose grounds.

Mr. Renton: The only data available centrally relate to Hong Kong and information up to the first quarter of 1988 was published in the Official Report on 20 July 1987 at column 649 in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden). Corresponding information for the second and third quarters of 1988 is given in the table.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance from (a) wives, (b) husbands, (c) fiancés and (d) fiancées made at British posts in (1) New Delhi, (2) Bombay, (3) Calcutta, (4) Madras, (5) Dhaka, (6) Islamabad, (7) Karachi and (8) Colombo for each quarter since January 1987 were (a) received, (b) granted and (c) refused; how many refusals at each post were (a) wholly and (b) partly because the visa officer was not satisfied that the primary purpose of the marriage was not immigration; how many refusals at each post were (a) wholly and (b) partly because the visa officer was not satisfied that the couple could support and accommodate themselves without recourse to public funds; what was the refusal rate at each post; and what percentage of those refusals were (x) wholly and (y) partly on primary purpose grounds.

Mr. Renton: The information available up to the first quarter of 1988 was published in the Official Report, columns 886-88 in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 19 October 1988. Corresponding information for the second and third quarters of 1988 is in the table. Information on refusal rates which take account of successful appeals is not available quarterly.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for (a) single entry and (b) multiple entry visit visas were (x) received, (y) granted and (z) refused at each post in the Indian subcontinent, Ghana and Nigeria in each quarter of 1987 and the first quarter of 1988; and what was the delay between application and interview for those whose applications were felt to need a second or long interview at each of the above posts in (i) January 1987, (ii) June 1987, (iii) January 1988 and (iv) the nearest available date.

Mr. Renton: Information up to the first quarter of 1988 was published in the Official Report, columns 42-44, in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 25 July 1988. Applicants for a visit visa who required a lengthy interview at the end of September 1988 had waited two days in Bombay, 12 days in Accra and one day in Lagos; in other posts the interview was carried out on the day the application was received.

Immigration Vouchers

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were waiting for special quota vouchers in (i) India and (ii) East Africa in (a) May 1987 and (b) December 1987; when those issued with vouchers on those dates had applied; how many vouchers were issued in (1) India and (2) East Africa in: (A) 1987 and (B) the first quarter of 1988; when those applying can now expect ot receive vouchers in (a) India and (b) East Africa in (x) 1987 and (y) the first half of 1988.

Mr. Renton: Information up to the first quarter of 1988 was published in the Official Report, columns 645-48 in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 20 July 1988. Corresponding information on voucher applications received in the second quarter of 1988 and expected waiting times at the end of September 1988 is give in the table.

Immigration Queues

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men, (b) women and (c) children were waiting in each queue at each post in the Indian subcontinent on 31 March.

Mr. Renton: The information requested was published in the Official Report, columns 645-46 in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 20 July 1988.

Roberto Fiore

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Italian authorities about the continued presence in the United Kingdom of Roberto Fiore; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 15 December at column 721.

Television Companies

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his written answer of 15 December to the hon. Member for Southend, East, Official Report, column 705, if he will list those Community rules which prevent Her Majesty's Government from discriminating between United Kingdom and other European Economic Community television companies;

(2) pursuant to his written answer of 15 December to the hon. Member for Southend, East, Official Report, column 705, why Her Majesty's Government do not consider it desirable for non-European Economic Community companies to be eligible to have the control of television channels in the United Kingdom;

(3) pursuant to his written answer of 15 December to the hon. Member for Southend, East, Official Report, column 705, what information he has as to how many television channels or stations in other member states of the European Economic Community are controlled by United Kingdom companies.

Mr. Renton: A restriction on control of United Kingdom television companies by other EC companies would conflict with obligations under the treaty of Rome such as those relating to freedom to provide services (articles 59-66) and to participate in the capital of companies (article 221). Subject to this, the Government consider that foreign control of services using United Kingdom broadcasting frequencies should be prevented because of the power and cultural influence of those services. Information on shareholdings by United Kingdom companies in television channels in other EC countries is not held centrally.

Peacetime Emergencies

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reasons were given to his Department by the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority for the closure of London's peacetime emergency control and communications centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No specific reasons were given to the Home Office by the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority for its decision to close the greater London emergency co-ordination centre. The Government's position was set out in the reply given to a question from the hon. Member on 31 March 1988 at column 682.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to promote legislation to impose a duty upon local authorities to prepare plans for peacetime disasters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 15 December at column 699.

London Underground (Policing)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on whether any plans exist to use officers from the Metropolitan police on the London Underground system during the Christmas period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The London Underground is policed by British Transport police, who are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. There is close liaison between British Transport police and the Metropolitan police and I understand from the commissioner that, as at other times of the year, officers of the Metropolitan police will be available over the Christmas period to assist British Transport police officers on the Underground if the need arises.

Firearms (Amendment) Act

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to implement the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988.

Mr. Hurd: I made a commencement order on 19 December 1988 which will bring into effect on 1 February 1989 the following provisions:

Section	Provision
1	Prohibited weapons and ammunition
7(1)	Converted prohibited weapons
8	De-activated weapons
9	Photographs on certificates
10	Statements in support of certificate applications
12	Revocation of certificates
13(2)(3)(4)(5)	Firearms dealers
14	Auctioneers, carriers and warehousemen
16	Borrowed rifles on private premises
21	Payments in respect of prohibited weapons
22	Firearms consultative committee
23(1)(2)(3) and (7)	Minor and consequential amendments
24(1)	Expenses
25	Interpretation and supplementary provisions

Transitional arrangements have been made to allow owners of newly prohibited weapons a period of three months—from 1 February to 30 April 1989—in which to dispose of their weapons. They may do so by sale to a registered firearms dealer, by transfer to such a dealer for the purpose of having the gun de-activated or, if the gun was legitimately held before 23 September 1987, by surrender to the police under the Government's buy-in scheme. Full details of the scheme together with an application form will be included in a leaflet which will be available from police stations in January.

Transitional arrangements have also been made to allow registered firearms dealers to continue to handle newly prohibited weapons for the purpose of their disposal for a period of nine months until 31 October 1989.

A second order to be made next year will bring into effect the remaining provisions.

Warning and Monitoring Arrangements

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the outcome of the review of warning and monitoring arrangements in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have received the report of the review. With the agreement of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Northern ireland and for Defence, I have today placed in the Library of the House a summary of the principal findings. The review has been conducted with great thoroughness and amounts to the most comprehensive analysis of our warning and monitoring arrangements for many years.

The review took account of current planning assumptions, technological advances and wider developments in civil protection. It made proposals for the development of a new warning system and for the automation of functions associated with monitoring. It also assessed the extent to which the warning and monitoring arrangements might usefully be applied to certain peacetime emergencies.

The programme of change proposed will require detailed scrutiny. In particular, the financial and operational implications will need further consideration by means of a number of detailed studies in key areas. No decisions have been taken about the review at this stage. Officials will now consult widely on its findings.

Blasphemy

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to extend the ambit of the offence of blasphemy to include non-Christian religions.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 19 December 1988]: In its "Report on Offences against Religion and Public Worship", published in 1985, the Law Commission recommended by a majority that the existing common law offence of blasphemy should be abolished. A minority took the view that the existing offence should be repealed and replaced with a criminal offence which applied to all religions. This view was supported by the bishop of London's group on blasphemy, which reported earlier this year. There is therefore no consensus for reform in this difficult and sensitive area of the law and we have no present plans for legislation.

Mr. Errol Codling

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much it cost to send two Scotland Yard detectives to accompany Mr. Errol "Ranking Dread" Codling to Jamaica recently; how long the detectives spent in Jamaica; and where they were accommodated;

(2) pursuant to his reply of 1 December, Official Report, column 400, why it was necessary to send two Scotland Yard detectives to accompany Mr. Errol "Ranking Dread" Codling to Jamaica on 8 November.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answers 1 December and 8 December 1988]: Mr. Codling was removed from the United Kingdom as an illegal entrant on 9 November following his earlier deportation from the United States of America to the United Kingdom under a false name and using a United Kingdom passport which he had obtained fraudulently. As he was also wanted in Jamaica in connection with a crime of violence, he was accompanied by two police officers.

The police officers took hotel accommodation in Jamaica and arrived back in this country on 13 November. During their stay they carried out a number of inquiries relating to crimes in this country. The travel and subsistence costs of the officers totalled £3,724.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of (a) schoolchildren and (b) others are estimated to have been involved in solvent abuse in each of the last five years; what further measures he proposes to eliminate this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I regret that information on the extent of solvent misuse is not available in the form requested. A number of limited studies have estimated prevalence among selected samples of young people but it would not be valid to extrapolate from these to national figures. As regards measures taken to reduce solvent misuse, I refer to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) on 6 December at column 131. We are reviewing the scope for further action in this area.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Applications

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for each of the years since 1983, how many planning applications specifically concerning water authority land and rejected by local authorities or other planning bodies in England and Wales, have been called in by the Secretary of State; and, of those called in, how many have ultimately been successful on appeal.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Newmarket (Boundary Transfer)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which a public statement was made by an official of the Local Government Boundary Commission for England to the effect that Newmarket should be transferred to Suffolk.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A misleading newspaper article published on 7 December indicated that the commission had reached firm conclusions about the boundary between Cambridgeshire and Suffolk in the Newmarket area. The commission's spokesman made it quite clear that this was not the case and that they would look at all the options again in the light of representations received in response to its draft proposals, including the option of no change. The secretary of the commission has asked the editor to publish a letter to correct the false impression given by the article.

Property Services Agency

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to refurbish the canteen at the Property Services Agency offices at Brooklands avenue, Cambridge; how much this refurbishment is expected to cost; what are the implications of this refurbishment for staff currently at Newmarket; and for what purpose.

Mr. Chope: Plans are being prepared to rationalise and refurbish the canteen serving the 1,100 staff of all Departments at Brooklands avenue. The estimated cost is £450,000. The space released will be converted to offices for the remaining PSA staff at Newmarket. This move will complete PSA eastern region's reorganisation proposals which my right hon. Friend approved in March 1987.

Sports Clubs

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is taking steps to bring England and Wales into line with Northern Ireland with regard to mandatory rate relief for non-profit making sports clubs.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. We intend to continue with the present system whereby local authorities in England and Wales can grant up to 100 per cent. rate relief to non-profit making sports clubs. The mandatory 65 per cent. rate relief given to sports clubs in Northern Ireland under the Rates Amendment (Northern Ireland) Order 1979 (SI 1979 No: 297 (NI.4) reflects the average level of discretionary rate relief given at the time to similar bodies by local authorities in England and Wales.

Land (Newham)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to (a) the area and (b) the value of land at (i) Abbey Mills pumping station and (ii) the Mill Head site, in the London borough of Newham.

Mr. Trippier: A site of 21·6 acres, which is part of the Abbey Mills pumping station (32 acres overall), is entered on the Newham statutory register of vacant public land. No information on either site value or the Mill Head site is held on the register.

EC (Birds)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those United Kingdom sites which qualify as important bird areas under the European Economic Commission birds directive, indicating those listed as special protection areas.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Details of those sites which, in the opinion of the Nature Conservancy Council, are important bird areas and which may meet the criteria for designation as special protection areas under the EC birds directive are set out below. Those sites already formally designated, either wholly or in part, as SPAs have been marked with an asterisk.

Housing

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list showing the extent and locations of foam slag and no fines houses in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The Department estimates that some 300,000 system-built poured concrete houses and flats have been built since 1920: and that over two thirds are of no fines constuction. The Building Research Establishment's forthcoming technical guidance, on the number of different no fines types, will include information on numbers and locations. One hundred and ninety-four poured concrete houses using formed slag aggregate have been identified in north-east Derbyshire; a similar material was also used for the precast concrete blocks and wall panels in the 850 Duplex foam slag and 1,622 Glasgow foamed slag houses in Scotland.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline his Department's initiatives since 1979 to improve housing provision in rural areas; and what further initiatives he plans.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 16 December 1988]: Since 1979 the Government have taken a number of initiatives to improve housing provision in all parts of the country. These include measures to encourage owner occupation and to stimulate choice and competition in the rented sector.

In addition there have been the following initiatives aimed specifically at rural areas:

From June 1984 to March 1988 the Rural Development Commission encouraged housing association schemes in rural areas by providing funds to cover extra costs incurred as a result of their rural location, (the topping up scheme).

Funding has been provided through the Housing Corporation and the Rural Development Commission for the national agricultural central rural trust, to help the trust set up and support rural housing associations.

The Rural Development Commission sponsors an advance land purchase fund which is administered by the national agricultural centre rural trust to purchase sites on behalf of housing association prior to Housing Corporation funding being made available.The Rural Development Commission has been involved in the provision of 14 craft houses with integral workshops.

From 1982 to 1987 the Rural Development Commission ran an experimental scheme to encourage the building of shared equity houses in rural areas.

On 5 July this year the Secretary of State published a statement outlining the Government's policy towards housing in rural areas and our proposals for increasing the supply of low-cost housing in such areas. The statement outlined the roles housing associations, the private sector and local authorities can play in meeting needs for low cost housing.

The proposals included:

An increase in the Rural Development Commission's funding of the national agricultural centre rural trust this year to nearly treble last year's level,

Adoption by the Housing Corporation of more flexible criteria for the selection of housing association schemes in rural areas,

An increase in the number of housing association homes for rent funded by the Housing Corporation in rural areas. The number of new homes approved was due to double to 300 this year and double again over the next two years to reach 600 units by 1990-91.

Following the Secretary of State's announcement on 1 November of a substantial increase in the Housing Corporation's programme over the next three years we announced on 14 December that the corporation has agreed to bring forward to 1989-90 its target of approving 600 new rented homes in the special rural programme. It will also be targeting more of its increased programme of housing for sale to rural areas. A further announcement will be made in due course on targets for later years and on the Housing Corporation's investment in rural areas generally.

Planning and Housing in Rural Areas

Since 1979 we have issued a number of circulars and planning policy guidance notes giving advice to local planning authorities on the provision of an adequate supply of housing land and the need to balance the requirements for development with the continuing need to protect their countryside.

On 5 July this year the Secretary of State published a discussion paper on the planning aspects of housing in rural areas. This included discussion of the possibility of new villages in certain circumstances.

BISF Properties (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met owners of BISF properties in Bilsborough, Nottingham, to discuss mortgagability and designation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Together with the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) I met owners of BISF properties at Bilborough on 15 December. We discussed the progress being made, with Nottingham city council and local lending institutions, on measures to remove blight and help owners finance improvement work.

Heritage

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many applicantions for grants for rescue archaeology were made to English Heritage in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988; what was the total sum applied for in each of these years; how many grants were approved and at what total cost in each of these years; and how much money in each year was for post-excavation projects;

(2) whether he will make a statement on the English Heritage central excavations unit and its rôle in rescue archaeology;

(3) how many applications were received for grants from county sites and monuments records; what amount these totalled; how many awards were made; and for what total, in the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88;

(4) how many applications were received in the year 1986-87 by English Heritage for grants for the repair of individually outstanding secular buildings; how many grants were offered; what was the total of such grants; and if he will provide equivalent figures for 1987-88;

(5) how many prosecutions have been taken by English Heritage against landowners for carrying out work on schedule sites without consent; and what have been the results of such prosecutions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for English Heritage.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the role of English Heritage in conserving field monuments, and on the employment of field monument wardens; how many there are; and if there are plans to increase their numbers and use.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: English Heritage has a general duty, among other things, to secure the preservation of ancient monuments and historic buildings in England. It is my right hon. Friend's statutory adviser on scheduling of ancient monuments and on applications for scheduled monument consent. It also has powers to provide financial assistance to owners for the preservation of field and other monuments (whether scheduled or not). I have sent the hon. Member a copy of English Heritage's latest annual report and I am sure the chairman would be happy to provide further information on their activities.

Scheduled Monument Consent

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications were received in 1987 for the scheduled monument consent; and what expertise exists within his Department to deal with such applications.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of 781. English Heritage advise my right hon. Friend on scheduled monument consent cases.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many recommendations for scheduled monument consent have been prepared for the Salisbury plain training area; and how long it will take to process these applications.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that, subject to current discussions with the Ministry of Defence, English Heritage expects to recommend between 250 and 300 monuments for scheduling early in the new year. They will be processed as quickly as possible.

Ancient Monuments

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications were made during 1987 by English Heritage for the repair, acquisition or analysis of ancient monuments; and how many have been granted.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The majority of English Heritage's repair grant cases and works projects do not require my right hon. Friend's consent. The Department has details of only a small proportion of the cases. There is no central record.

Archaeology

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has received from English Heritage on forestry policy as it affects archaeology.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No formal advice has been received. English Heritage works closely with the Forestry Commission on forestry matters which may affect sites of archaeological interest.

English Heritage

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current level of funding for English Heritage; and what is the planned level for each of the next three years, to enable it to complete its scheduled monument programme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: English Heritage's grant in aid for 1988-89 is £65·863 million; the provision for the next three years is £72·3 million, £74·5 million, £76·3 million. There is no specific allocation within these figures for the scheduled monument programme: English Heritage is responsible for the allocation of its overall resources between individual programmes.

Tinsley Park

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many representations he has received about the proposed opencast coal mining and airport plans on Tinsley park in south Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has had any representations from the Sheffield urban development corporation about the proposed opencast coal mine and STOL airport at Tinsley park in south Yorkshire;

(3) how many representations he has received about a public inquiry into the plans for an opencast coal mine and a STOL airport at Tinsley park in south Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received 32 representations about the proposed open cast coal mining at Tinsley park, 16 about the proposed airport and seven about possible public inquiries into these proposed developments. No formal representations have been received from the Sheffield development corporation about either proposal.

I understand that planning applications for both developments have recently been considered by the relevant local planning authorities, Sheffield MBC and Rotherham MBC. They have both resolved to refer the airport application to the Secretary of State as a departure from the approved development plan. We shall consider the matter carefully when the full details of the proposal are received.

So far as the application for opencast mining is concerned, I understand that detailed discussions are underway between the parties to establish an acceptable planning framework for open-casting.

Sewage Treatment

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total of non-compliant sewage treatment works in 1986 and 1987 in England and Wales, broken down by water authority area.

Mr. Ridley: The number of water authority sewage treatment works with numerical consent conditions which did not comply with their consents in 1986 and 1987 is given in the following table.

Sewage treatment works with numerical consent conditions: non-compliance 1986 and 1987—England and Wales

London Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received requesting section 138 powers to be granted to the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Representations were received earlier this year from the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority and one other person.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to extend section 138 powers to the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Viginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has no plans to extend section 138 powers to the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority. There is no case for giving the authority access to these powers.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish a model instrument of appointment under the Water Bill for the water and sewerage undertakers.

Mr. Howard: I have today made copies available to Members of the Standing Committee considering the Water Bill, and placed copies in the Library of both Houses accompanied by an explanatory memorandum. The model includes conditions concerning the charges, accounts, levels of service, asset availability and underground assets of the future water utility companies, and includes requirements on those companies to have codes of practice concerning customers and relations with customer service committees, disconnection of water supplies, and liability for leaking of water. The companies will also be required to provide information to the Director General of Water Services and to pay fees to cover regulatory costs.

Rating Reform

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a breakdown of both the numbers and the average liability of (a) one parent families, (b) two parent families, (c) single pensioners and (d) couple pensioners who will pay the community charge, broken down into (i) regions and (ii) local authority areas.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 15 December 1988]: The table shows domestic rates and community charges net of rebate in pounds per week, broken down into regions. The figures are based on data contained in the family expenditure survey and the illustrative community charges published on 23 June 1988. Analyses of individual local authority areas are not possible because of the limitations of the survey data.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish up-to-date poll tax figures to replace tables in Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government."

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax but I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 15 December at columns 725-6 to my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) concerning the community charge.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been, in real terms, the housing investment programme allocation, showing, separately, money from the Housing Corporation, to the London borough of Tower Hamlets in each year since 1978-79; and when has been the actual housing expenditure achieved.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 December 1988]: The available information is given below:

Since 1981-82 local authorities have been able to supplement their allocations by expenditure financed from capital receipts. Nationally, over half of local authorities capital expenditure in 1988-89 is expected to be financed from capital receipts.

Football Clubs (Membership Scheme)

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessments have been made of the financial effects on smaller football clubs of the compulsory introduction of a pass for members, of the effect of such a scheme on violence in town centres and on the workload of local police forces.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 December 1988]: It is not possible to estimate the financial effects of the scheme until its details, particularly the technology to be employed, have been settled. But a company with considerable experience of membership schemes at individual clubs has said that with co-operation from the football authorities and proper marketing and management, the scheme could be set up and run at no cost to the clubs.

The scheme is an important element of the Government's efforts to break the link between football and hooliganism. As these take effect, I hope they will help to reduce all football-related violence both inside grounds and elsewhere, and consequent demands on the police service.

Water Authorities

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 2 December, Official Report, column 427, whether he will instruct the water authorities in England to provide details of the area of land owned by them which has been designated as (a) sites of special scientific interest, (b) national parks, and (c) areas of outstanding natural beauty.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 19 December 1988]: No. But I am considering whether additional information on these matters should be assembled and made available.

Football (Racism)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on measures being taken to counteract racism at football matches.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

The policing of football matches is a matter for the appropriate chief officers of police, whose unremitting efforts have brought about an improvement in overall crowd behaviour in the last three years. The police are committed to taking firm action against racially offensive behaviour wherever and whenever it occurs. Part III of the Public Order Act 1986 provided tough new powers against those whose behaviour is intended, or is likely, to stir up racial hatred. The football authorities and the clubs themselves also have a part to play in making it very clear that such behaviour will not be tolerated on their premises. The national membership scheme will provide them with an excellent opportunity for doing so.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

National Curriculum

12. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the latest position regarding the introduction of the national core curriculum.

24. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the implementation of the national curriculum.

54. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the implementation of the national curriculum.

61. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the national school curriculum.

65. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the implementation of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Wales have recently published proposals for primary English and will shortly publish draft orders for mathematics and science. They have published interim reports from working groups on design and technology and Welsh. We are well on target for the implementation of statutory requirements from September 1989.

15. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding the percentage of time proposed to be spent on science in the national curriculum.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Western Isles (Mr. MacDonald).

27. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is now in a position to publish the quantity and type of teachers required to deliver the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

46. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is now in a position to publish the quantity and type of teachers required to deliver the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Members to the answer which my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley).

41. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further progress has been made with the working parties on the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The English working group has submitted its report on ages 5 to 11, which my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Wales published on 15 November with their comments. It has been asked to report on ages 11 to 16 by 30 April 1989. Both the Welsh and the design and technology working groups have submitted interim reports, which were published on 9 and 24 November respectively. Their final reports are due by 30 April 1989.

Engineering Courses

13. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students are currently taking engineering courses at universities in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: In 1987 there were 45,000 students studying engineering and technology at universities in the United Kingdom.

City Technology Colleges

14. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any further proposals for city technology colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Ipswich (Mr. Irvine).

77. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the number of applications he has received to sponsor city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: There has been an unprecedented response from industry to the CTC programme. Already over 100 firms have pledged over £31 million in sponsorship. Many more will come forward as CTCs are established. The original support for the Kingshurst CTC came from just two companies: it now has 64 companies providing financial and other support; and Nottingham, which will open next year, already has 27.

33. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any further proposals for city technology colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ipswich (Mr. Irvine) earlier this afternoon.

Private Schools

16. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions have been undertaken by his Department in regard to the maintenance of a statistical record of the costs of charitable status of private schools.

Mr. Butcher: None.

Parent Governors

18. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the percentage parent governors of primary and secondary schools who have a background of active professional teaching.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on the occupational backgrounds of school governors is not collected centrally. The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 provides for parent governors to be elected by and from parents of registered pupils at the school. It is thus a matter for the whole parent body to decide who can best represent parents' interests on the governing body.

Inner London (Education)

19. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with the inner London boroughs on the transfer of responsibilities to them from the Inner London education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and I have met the leaders of the inner London councils, individually and collectively, several times this year, and are due to do so again tomorrow. We have been heartened by the positive approach which the boroughs are taking to their new education responsibilities.

Student Loans

20. Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to introduce legislation during the current session to enact the proposals in his White Paper on student finance; and if he will make a statement.

52. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to introduce legislation during the current Session to enact the proposals in his White Paper on student finance; and if he will make a statement.

70. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he plans to introduce legislation to enact the proposals in his White Paper on student finance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Legislation will be introduced in time to enable top-up loans to be introduced in the 1990-91 academic year.

22. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received, since his statement on student loans (a) in support of the Government's policy and (b) expressing opposition to Government policy.

78. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on his White Paper concerning student loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on his White Paper on student loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received about student grants and loans.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Members to the answer my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace).

23. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to transfer resources from the maintenance grant currently paid to students to the recurrent grant.

Mr. Jackson: No. On the illustrative assumptions in the White Paper "Top-up loans for Students", public expenditure on support for students' living costs will show a substantial increase from 1990 to the beginning of the next century.

80. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now withdraw his proposals for the introduction of student loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: No.

Applied Sciences

21. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is seeking any further initiatives to develop sixth-form and higher education skills in the applied sciences in 1989.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. I am satisfied that developments in hand—including the spread of advanced supplementary levels, the improvement of the vocational qualifications systems, and bridging courses for non-science A-level holders to enter scientific and technological degree courses —will contribute to improved numbers undertaking scientific and technological courses post-16. The engineering and technology programme and the manufacturing systems engineering programme will provide additional places in higher education in engineering and technology subjects.

Mathematics and Science Teachers

25. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the likely impact of any shortages of specialist trained teachers on mathematics and science in primary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Most teaching in primary schools is by general class teachers. The Government are supporting in-service training through the LEA training grant scheme and the provision of advisory staff through education support grants to provide primary teachers with extra subject expertise and support in mathematics and science.

Nursery Teachers

26. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has any plans to increase the number of nursery teachers; and if he will make a statement.

36. Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has any plans to increase the number of nursery teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Members to the answer which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Redcar (Ms. Mowlam).

Scottish Universities

28. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the financing of Scottish universities.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend and I receive many representations bearing on the financing of Scottish universities.

57. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the financial deficits of each of the following universities: (a) Edinburgh, (b) Heriot-Watt, (c) Strathclyde, (d) Glasgow, (e) Stirling, (f) Aberdeen, (g) Dundee and (h) St. Andrews.

Mr. Jackson: The University Grants Committee monitors the financial position of these and all other universities in the context of its administration of the restructuring programme which aims to help institutions achieve financial balance in sound academic shape by 1990-91.

Grant-maintained Schools

29. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have applied for grant-maintained status; and how many applications he expects to receive.

50. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have given an indication that they wish to apply to opt out of local authority control.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have made inquiries as to the possibility of opting out of local authority control.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the progress in respect of opting out ballots under the Education Reform Act.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many requests for grant-maintained status have so far been received by his Department.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have conducted ballots with a view to opting out of the local authority system and becoming grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools he expects to opt out of the maintained system in their first year of eligibility to do so; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: A large number of parents and governors from schools of all kinds have made inquiries about grant-maintained status and about the formal procedures by which an individual school can seek to become grant-maintained. Four schools have already held secret postal ballots of parents which have shown large majorities in favour of making applications to my right hon. Friend, and he will consider these on their merits in due course. I expect a good many more to follow suit over the coming months.

Schools (Opting-out)

30. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when is the first school term in which he expects schools to be opted out.

Mr. Butcher: I expect the first schools to become grant-maintained in September 1989.

34. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools on the verge of closure have asked for opting out; and how many other schools of the state system of education have also applied.

Mr. Butcher: Schools for which my right hon. Friend has approved closures proposals under section 12 of the Education Act 1980 are not eligible to apply for grant-maintained status. Schools which are currently subject to proposals under that Act may apply for grant-maintained status: in such cases my right hon. Friend will consider both sets of proposals together.

60. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what figures he has for the percentages of parents taking part in the ballots to decide whether or not schools should opt out of local authority control.

Mr. Butcher: The results of the four secret postal ballots on grant-maintained status held so far have shown a very high level of interest among the parents concerned. The percentage of parents of registered pupils voting in each ballot has been:

	Per cent.
Skegness Grammar School, Lincolnshire:	80
St. James's Church of England School, Farnworth:	83
Audenshaw High School for Boys, Tameside:	86
Wilson's School, Sutton:	76

Greenhouse Effect

31. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he has made for co-ordinating research on the greenhouse effect.

Mr. Jackson: The principal agencies funding relevant research on the global environment, namely, the Natural Environment Research Council, the Science and Engineering Research Council and the Meteorological Office, interact through channels including their Joint Climate Committee, the Robert Hooke Institute, and the United Kingdom Committee for the World Ocean Circulation Experiment. I understand that discussions are planned to further develop co-ordination in global environment research.

Schools (Organisation)

32. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the operation of the three-tier system of school organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has recently received correspondence from hon. Members, the Oxfordshire county council and the public concerning plans agreed by the Conservative group on the council to replace the present three-tier system of schools in Oxford with a two-tier one. Responsibility for formulating plans for school reorganisation rests with local education authorities and other proposers in the voluntary schools sector. My right hon. Friend's powers are limited to considering those statutory proposals submitted to him for consideration. It would be inappropriate for me to comment on this plan, other than to note that it has not yet been considered by the county council.

School Activities (Charging)

35. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Education Reform Act 1988 as it affects charging for school activities.

Mr. John Butcher: The Education Reform Act clarifies earlier legislation in establishing that schools may not charge for any provision offered during school hours, with the exception of individual music tuition. Charges may be made for activities provided outside school hours, unless these are required for a prescribed examination syllabus, or to fulfil statutory duties in connection with the national curriculum or religious education. Restrictions on charging do not prevent local authorities or schools from seeking voluntary contributions in support of any activity. Guidance on this aspect of the Act will issue in January 1989.

University Physics

37. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes to meet the University Grants Committee to discuss the conclusions and recommendations of its "Review of the Future of University Physics".

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend and I have frequent meetings and exchanges with the chairman of the University Grants Committee on a variety of issues.

GCSE

38. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what conclusions his Department has drawn from the results of the GCSE examinations held this summer; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: This year's GCSE results support the findings by Her Majesty's inspectors of better teaching and learning in schools following the introduction of the new examination. The GCSE examining groups and the School Examinations and Assessment Council are reviewing syllabuses and procedures in order to make any necessary improvements for next year's courses and examinations.

45. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department will fund a study into the relationship between GCSE and staying on rates at 16 years of age.

48. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department will fund a study into the relationship between GCSE and staying on rates at 16 years of age.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department already monitors staying on rates, and is able with the help of advice from Her Majesty's inspectorate and other sources, to deduce causes of changes in such rates. In addition, the Department has been co-funding the youth cohort study, together with the Department of Employment and the Training Agency, which provides evidence from a large sample of 16-year-olds on the factors influencing their subsequent decisions and attainments. My right hon. Friend is at present considering the possible funding of a study of the cohort reaching the age of 16 in 1987-88, which includes the first GCSE award holders.

Higher Education

39. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department intends to announce further plans to broaden access to higher education; and if he will make a statement.

68. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department intends to announce further plans to broaden access to higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department intends to announce further plans to broaden access to higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The need for broader patterns of entry to higher education is widely recognised. The Government are assisting the process by funding a variety of related research projects. While actual recruitment is dependent on the policies and decisions of individual institutions, there has been an increase in the overall number of students of some 200,000 or 25 per cent. over the past decade.

Surplus School Places

40. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received any representations from local education authorities about surplus places; and if he will make a statement.

63. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received any representations from local education authorities about surplus places; and if he will make a statement.

67. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received any representations from local education authorities about surplus places; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend receives such representations from time to time, usually in connection with statutory proposals for school reorganisation. He has also recently received a letter on this subject from the chairman of the education committee of the Association of County Councils.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions)

42. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made towards establishing new negotiating arrangements for school teachers' pay and conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 11 November at column 318.

City Technology College (Brent)

43. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether there are any plans to open a city technology college in the London borough of Brent.

Mrs. Rumbold: The London borough of Brent is one of a number of London boroughs being considered with sponsors as a suitable area for the establishment of a city technology college.

Universities Funding Council

44. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next expects to meet the chairman-designate of the Universities Funding Council; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend and I have had, and will continue to have, discussions with the chairman-designate of the Universities Funding Council on a range of matters.

HM Inspectors

47. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what role he intends for Her Majesty's inspectors in the implementation of the Education Reform Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Her Majesty's inspectors will continue to assess educational standards and trends, and to advise me on the performance of the system at both institutional and national levels, in the light of all developments including the Education Reform Act.

School Meals

49. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the nutritional value of school meals in Bradford.

Mr. John Butcher: None.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish a table showing how much expenditure on school meals has changed in cash and real terms each year between 1979 and the latest date available;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the average price of a school meal in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools for each year between 1979 and 1988 in current prices and 1988 prices.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 10 November at columns 253-54.

Science Teaching

51. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to announce proposals on the implementation of the report on science teaching from the National Curriculum Council.

55. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to announce proposals on the implementation of the report on science teaching from the National Curriculum Council.

Mrs. Rumbold: The draft order for national curriculum science will be sent out very shortly to those to be consulted under the process of further consultation required by the Education Reform Act. It will be been drawn up in the light of the National Curriculum Council's advice.

Police and Schools

53. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the code of practice on police and schools produced by the police-school liaison group.

Mr. Butcher: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him on 15 December by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department. Like my hon. Friend, I welcome the spirit of co-operation which the code of practice reflects.

Physics and Chemistry

56. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to strengthen the links between teaching and research in physics and chemistry throughout higher education.

Mr. Jackson: The first-stage reports of the University Grants Commitee's reviews of physics and chemistry in universities, which were issued for consultation on 28 October, both consider the principles of strengthening provision for teaching and research in these subjects. Generally, my right hon. Friend's letters of 31 October to the chairmen of the new higher education funding councils deal with the roles of both teaching and research in higher education.

Private Schools (Subsidies)

58. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to reduce the present level of subsidies by the taxpayer to the private school system.

Mr. Butcher: No, and I am pleased to say that the assisted places scheme which comes within my Department's expenditure programme is to be expanded to take in 52 more independent schools from September 1989.

Teachers

59. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will report on progress on his policy of attracting more teachers to the profession.

81. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals to announce aimed at improving teacher recruitment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals to announce aimed at improving teacher recruitment; and if he will make a statement.

72. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Eduation and Science what proposals he has to attract more mature entrants to the teaching profession.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals to announce aimed at improving teacher recruitment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Our existing action programme on teacher recruitment includes special bursaries for trainee teachers, substantial local and national advertising and the establishment of the "Teaching as a Career" unit. Action is focused on tackling shortages in secondary subjects and in particular regions. We aim to recruit teachers from all sources including mature entrants. The programme is under continual review and we are prepared to take further action as necessary.

Mount Carmel School, Accrington

62. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about consolidating Mount Carmel high school, Accrington, on one site at Wordsworth road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The plans submitted by Lancashire LEA for capital building work at county and voluntary schools in 1989-90 included a project to consolidate Mount Carmel Roman Catholic high school on to one site. My right hon. Friend is at present considering these plans together with those from other LEAs and expects to make an announcement shortly.

Schools-Industry Links

64. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of Srtate for Education and Science if it is possible to estimate the number of secondary schools that maintain tangible links with local industry through inviting industrialists to speak to pupils or organising field trips to local industrial sites as part of the school curriculum.

Mr. Butcher: The information with which to estimate the number of secondary schools with these specific links is not available. However, on the basis of two surveys conducted in 1987 and 1988, it is possible to state that well over two thirds of secondary schools have regular links with local industry.

Schools (Capital Allocations)

66. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, what recent representations he has received relating to capital allocations for schools.

Mr. Butcher: All local education authorities in England have now submitted to the Department their capital expenditure plans for 1989-90 with supporting information. In addition, a number of school governors, diocesan bodies and hon. Members have made representations about capital allocations in support of individual LEAs and schools. I have also recently met several deputations to discuss capital allocations for schools.

Bradford CTC

69. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the estimated contribution from public funds towards the proposed city tecnnology college in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department is currently undertaking a feasibility and cost study for Bradford CTC and discussions with sponsors are continuing. It would be premature to make a statement on figures for either capital or recurrent costs to the Department until both the study and discussions have been completed; but, as with all CTCs, the sponsors will be required to make a significant contribution to capital costs.

Homework

71. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is planning to give any advice to local education authorities about arrangements for pupils' homework; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government believe that appropriately set and marked homework valuably reinforces work in the classroom. We would encourage every local education authority to have a policy for homework as part of its policy for the curriculum as a whole. This should state clearly how parents can help their children to get most value out of homework and should offer guidance on the amount and character of homework which should be expected of pupils of different ages and abilities.

School Governors

73. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the take-up of school governor posts by representatives of local communities and businesses.

Mr. Butcher: The information available so far from local authorities suggests that most schools are successfully filling all the places on their governing bodies. In very many areas considerable interest has been shown by the local community, including business representatives. That is welcome.

Further Education Colleges

74. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to modify the arrangements for crediting short-term courses in further education colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: With the exception of non-advanced evening only courses and non-released part-time day courses, places provided by each local education authority on further education courses are taken into account in that authority's grant-related expenditure assessment for rate support grant purposes in accordance with returns made by the authority in the further education statistical record on 1 November each year. From 1989-90 onwards the grant-related expenditure assessment will also take account of certain part-time and non-degree courses of higher education provided by local education authorities in colleges which they maintain or assist.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

75. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the extension of the technical and vocational education initiative.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since the TVEI extension programme began in September 1987, nearly 70 education authorities in England, Wales and Scotland have started a preparatory or extension scheme; and nearly 40 more have applied to participate from September 1989. I am glad to say that every authority in Britain now has a TVEI pilot, preparatory or extension scheme.

Aberdeen University

76. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has had any discussions with the University Grants Committee or Universities Funding Council on the report into the finances of Aberdeen university jointly commissioned by the University Grants Committee or Universities Funding Council and Aberdeen university; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The management consultants' report in question was commissioned by Aberdeen university and the University Grants Committee to offer an independent review of the university's financial situation and prospects. Its recommendations concern both planning and funding. They are rightly addressed to the university and the UGC, to which appropriate action now falls.

Speech Therapy

79. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the role of education authorities in the provision of speech therapy.

Mr. Butcher: An amendment to the Education Act 1981 which came into force on 1 November 1988 gives local education authorities the power to provide non-educational provision, including speech therapy, for children with statements of special educational need. It remains however the duty of the district health authority to provide speech therapy under the National Health Service Act 1977.

Women (Education)

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of women in full-time further education or Open University courses for each year since 1973.

Mr. Jackson: The readily available information is shown in the following table.

Women in higher education in Britain

Higher Education (Derbyshire)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many full-time students in higher education are in receipt of the following levels of grant from Derbyshire county council: (a) maximum grants, (b) minimum grants and (c) grants over the minimum and below the maximum levels presented in deciles.

Mr. Jackson: The available data are as follows:

Mandatory Awards (Derbyshire LEA) 1986-87

	Student numbers	Percentage of award holders
Full maintenance	[1]1931	31·5
Maintenance reduced by Assessment
(i) Numbers of dependent students with Parental Contributions of:

[1]Includes dependent and independent students.
[2]The minimum grant was abolished with effect from 1985-86. For these students only the course fees are paid.

Governors and Parents (Guidance)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he intends to issue guidance to governors and parents of schools who have voted to become grant maintained but whose plans are hindered by the actions of the local education authority.

Mr. Butcher: My Department has issued a circular (10/88) on grant-maintained schools and has also published a booklet for school governors on how to apply for grant-maintained status for their school. We have no plans to issue further guidance but these documents give the names of officials in my Department who are ready to answer requests for advice from individual schools, governors and parents on particular questions of concern to them.

Top-up Loans (Mature Students)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 5 December, Official Report, column 7, what proposals he will institute to ensure that mature students of 50 years and over will be eligible for student top-up loans; and whether there is to be an upper-age limit for entitlement to student top-up loans.

Mr. Jackson: None. Like the student loan schemes of other countries, our top-up loans scheme will be subject to an age limit. We propose to restrict top-up loans to eligible students aged less than 50 at the start of their course. Students reaching that age after the start of their course will however be eligible to make fresh borrowings for the full length of it.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many non-industrial civil servants are in receipt of family credit; how many receive income support and how many receive housing benefit; and what is the total amount paid weekly to non-industrial civil servants for each of the above benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the average length of time taken to process applications for family credit; what is his assessment of the effect this has upon (a) the subsequent processing of housing benefit and (b) the accumulation of rent arrears; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: For the average length of time taken to process claims for family credit, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hereford (Mr. Shepherd) on 6 December at column 124. Where a person receiving or claiming housing benefit has also claimed family credit, the calculation of his housing benefit will not be affected until family credit is actually received. The award will be treated as a normal change of circumstances, reducing housing benefit or eliminating it altogether depending on the amount by which the claimant's total net income including family credit exceeds his applicable amount. There should be no question of rent arrears arising from these arrangements.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will indicate how many claims for family credit have (a) been received, (b) been determined and (c) resulted in an award.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: By 16 December 1988, 480,000 claims had been received. Of these, 434,000 had been determined, of which 299,000 had resulted in an award. In addition, 206,000 awards of family income supplement were converted to awards of family credit, without a claim being made.

Pensioners

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security who will benefit from the new scheme for pensioners announced in the House on 24 November.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Pensioners on income support aged 75 and over, and disabled pensioners aged 60 and over, will benefit directly; those on housing benefit in these categories will also gain by up to the specified amounts.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has as to the comparative value of pensioners' income and costs between countries in the European Community.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available as the European Commission does not collect information as to the comparative value of pensioners' income and costs between countries in the European Community.

National Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give figures showing the rates of insured persons' national insurance contributions and employers' national insurance contributions which would be necessary in (a) 1988-89 and (b) 1989-90 in order to maintain the level of finance of the National Insurance Fund in those years if the Treasury supplement were increased to its 1978-79 level as a proportion of all National Insurance Fund revenues.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1978-79 the Treasury supplement was 18 per cent. of gross contributions. The table shows the main rates of class 1 contributions required in 1988-89 and 1989-90 to maintain the estimated level of income in the national insurance fund published in the Government Actuary's report (Cm. 537) on the uprating and rerating orders, if the Treasury supplement were 18 per cent. in both years:

	Insured person (primary) Per cent.	Employer (secondary) Per cent.
1989-90	7·75	9·00

Proportionate reductions in the class 1 lower band contribution rates and in contribution rates for the self-employed would also take place. The higher Treasury supplement would cost the taxpayer £5·25 billion in 1988-89 and £5·35 billion in 1989-90.

Durham Local Office

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total benefits and allowances payable to Mr. Swainston, 3 Hawthorn park, Brandon, Durham on completion of phasing-in of the recent social security changes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have written to the hon. Member.

Investigators

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases the special board and lodging control staff team that has recently visited the Doncaster area has investigated; what were the results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A benefit fraud team is currently undertaking inquiries into board and lodging fraud in the Doncaster area and has so far investigated 184 cases. Fraud has been established in 36 cases.

Expenditure

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the current overspend or underspend on budgeted totals for each of his Department's regional offices in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available centrally. Overall, the manpower budget for all social security offices in Scotland in 1988-89 is £77,382,978 and the non-manpower budget is £14,014,711. As at 31 October 1988 the expenditure on these budgets was £45,707,913 and £6,014,237 respectively.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the net reduction in total housing benefit payable within each district council authority area in Scotland as a result of the changes to the housing benefit system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd As indicated in the reply given to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 14 November at column 446, the information available has been placed in the Library.

Computerisation

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by Department of Social Security office how many microcomputers are held by each office at the latest available date; how many editions of software have been produced since the start of the social fund; and how many serious errors in the software have been identified.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 5 December 1988]: The number of microcomputers held by each local social security office is shown in the table. Since April 1988, there have been two further editions each of income support and social fund software and one further edition each of casepaper location and direct payments software. A number of errors, of varying degrees of seriousness, have been found in the social fund software, many of these have already been corrected and all outstanding serious errors will be rectified in a further release of the software later this month.

ENERGY

Electricity Supply (Voltage)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to require the United Kingdom electricity supply industry to fall into line with the proposed EEC-EFTA voltage supply change to 230 volts.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A technical committee of the international electrotechnical commission, a non-governmental body with membership extending well beyond the member countries of the EC and EFTA, has for many years been discussing the standardisation of electricity supply voltages amongst its members, and it is expected that national committees will be asked to adopt a standard of 230 volts for use in national standard specifications, which in the United Kingdom are set by the British Standards Institute. However, the supply voltage in Great Britain is set at 240 volts by virtue of a statutory instrument rather than a British standard specification. The Government have no present plans to recommend to Parliament a change in the voltage of supply.

Oil and Gas Platforms (Safety)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will list by subject matter the 57 prosecutions of companies for breaches of health and safety law on offshore oil and gas platforms referred to in the answer of 27 October, Official Report, column 316; and what fines were imposed for each of those which resulted in convictions.

Mr. Peter Morrison: A list of subject matter of the 57 prosecutions can only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However, a register of convictions of companies for breaches of health and safety legislation on offshore installations is held in my department and is available for inspection. If the hon. Member wishes I shall make arrangements for him to come and inspect it.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep Scab

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is investigating alternative measures of controlling sheep scab; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: 1988 marks the end of a five-year programme of twice annual national dipping. During the course of this year officials have been examining the arrangements for dealing with sheep scab in 1989 and beyond. A wide range of options has been considered, from total deregulation to maintaining the present arrangements. Before a decision is taken we intend to consult representatives of the sheep industry and local authorities, who have a key role in enforcement. A consultation document inviting comments will be issued very shortly.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to reduce the high concentrations of polychlorinated biphenyls in cod and whiting caught in Swansea bay

Mr. Donald Thompson: The national monitoring programme of fish in English and Welsh waters conducted by scientists from my Department shows that concentrations of polychlorinated biphenyl in our fish including cod and whiting from Swansea bay, are low.

Agriculture Council

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council in Brussels on 19 and 20 December 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: With my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, I attended the meeting held on 19 and 20 December of the Council of Agricultural Ministers of the European Community, which was a continuation of the one held last week.

The Council continued to discuss a package of proposed measures dealing with the reform of the beef support arrangements; changes in green rates in the beef sector; a scheme of direct income aids to farmers; aid for small cereals producers; improvement of production and marketing of nuts; and the question of allocating milk quotas to farmers who had gone out of production under the Community's non-marketing of milk schemes at the time quotas were introduced, following a recent European Court decision. Arrangements for the continued support of New Zealand butter over the next four years and proposed amendments to the agreements governing New Zealand's exports of sheepmeat to the Community has also been part of the package.

Despite lengthy discussion, no agreement could be reached on any items in the package. The Council therefore, rolled forward until 5 March all those aspects of the beef arrangements which were due to end on 31 December, including the variable premium.

The Council also rolled forward for three months the import arrangements for New Zealand butter, which would otherwise have expired on 31 December, the permitted quantity for this period being one quarter of the quantity for 1988. It is clear that this and all the other items under consideration at the Council will have to be taken up again in the new year.

Eggs

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has considered the introduction of a scheme to encourage egg producers to leave the industry or reduce the size of their flocks.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 19 December 1988]: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement given yesterday by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture Fisheries and Food at columns 21-22.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the results of tests by his Department's Microbiology Department on eggs produced by individual egg producers from England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 19 December 1988]: I can confirm that the microbiology laboratories of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service have tested eggs for salmonella. Normal commercial practice requires ADAS to seek the specific agreement of its customers before disclosing the individual results of such tests, but representatives of the egg industry have agreed to the release of the information in the interests of informing the consumer. I can therefore report that to date ADAS has tested in excess of 4,000 eggs from approximately 150 producers. Salmonella species has not been detected in any of these eggs.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total number of eggs exported over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement outlining the support mechanism and protection available to egg producers.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 19 December 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement that I made to the House on 19 December at columns 21-22 about the short-term measures to be introduced to help egg producers in the present critical period.

In the 12 months to October 1988, about 670,000 cases of eggs (each containing 360 eggs) were exported from the United Kingdom.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment his Department has made of the role of the immobility of labour in perpetuating high levels of unemployment in many areas of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: My Department has sponsored research into the links between unemployment, real wages and mobility of labour between regions. This research has been published. References are: Pissarides and Wadsworth: "Unemployment and the inter-regional mobility of labour" (CLE Discussion Paper No. 296); Jackman and Roper: "Structural Unemployment" (Oxford Bulletin of Economics and Statistics, February 1987).

Unemployment has fallen by three quarters of a million since the last general election. It is falling in all regions of the country and has fallen furthest over the last year in the west midlands, the north west and Wales.

North-east Derbyshire

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to create employment in north-east Derbyshire.

Mr. Cope: My Department operates a wide range of employment, enterprise and training measures, and offers services in support of small firms and tourism, which are all available in north-east Derbyshire as elsewhere.

During the 12 months to November 1988, unemployment in the Derbyshire, North-East constituency fell by 673—14 per cent. of the November 1987 figure.

ITB Pension Fund

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to allow pensioners of the ITB pension fund's closed fund, to have their pensions paid into a building society account.

Mr. Nicholls: Approval for amending the ITB closed pension fund rules to allow pensions to be paid to approved building societies has recently been given. The pension fund's trustees were informed on 6 December 1988.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which Health and Safety Executive inspectors were needed to assist with the investigation of the Piper Alpha incident; what Health and Safety Executive scientific staff were involved; and what planned preventative work was delayed.

Mr. Nicholls: Health and Safety Executive inspectors who assisted with the investigation of the Piper Alpha incident were three principal and two 1B inspectors from the factory inspectorate, and three superintending specialist inspectors from the technology division. The scientific staff involved comprised of a senior principal specialist from the research and laboratory services division. Planned preventive work delayed was mainly inspection visits by the factory inspectorate.

Construction Blitz

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list the number of enforcement notices and prosecutions undertaken by construction inspectors in the 12 months before the construction blitz, during the blitz and after the blitz.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's programme of blitzes on construction sites took place between 1 April 1987 and 30 September 1988. The number of prosecutions taken and enforcement notices issued against construction activities in the 12 months before the blitz, during the time the blitz was taking place and since the blitz ended is as follows:

Period	Prosecutions taken	Enforcement notices issued
1 April 1986—31 March 1987	375	1,063
1 April 1987—30 September 1988	[1]448	[1]4,521
1 October 1988—30 November 1988	[1]8	[1]141

[1] Provisional.

Note

These figures include action taken during each blitz as well as routine inspections of construction activities.

Factory and Agriculture Inspectorates

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria are used by the factory and agriculture inspectorates in deciding which reportable injuries should be investigated.

Mr. Nicholls: When selecting reported accidents for investigation, inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates consider the severity or potential severity of the injury, the gravity of any apparent breach of legislation, the need to give advice and guidance to the employer and the value of any information that would be obtained in preventing similar accidents.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many visits were made by the factory inspectorate specifically to investigate accidents and complaints in 1970, 1973, 1974 and 1980.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

It is not possible to distinguish between visits paid by the factory inspectorate to investigate accidents and complaints and those paid for other reasons in the years specified.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many visits, other than in response to accidents and complaints, were made by the factory inspectorate in the years 1970, 1973, 1974 and 1980.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

It is not possible to distinguish between visits paid by the factory inspectorate to investigate accidents and complaints and those paid for other reasons in the years specified.

Food and Environment Protection Act

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much time has been spent by Health and Safety Executive inspectors on the implementation of the Food and Environment Protection Act.

Mr. Nicholls: In the first year for which the Health and Safety Executive has been the enforcing authority, 1909·9 inspector days have been expended on work related to the Food and Environment Protection Act.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will place in the Library a copy of the guidance on the interpretation and enforcement of the Food and Environment Protection Act and its regulations that is issued to the agricultural inspectorate.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The internal guidance is provided to assist HSE inspectors in their interpretation of the legislation and would be unsuitable for more general readers. A guidance note on the storage of pesticides and an introductory leaflet on the Act have been published and I have placed copies of these in the Library.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list the work priorities which have been adjusted to accommodate Food and Environmental Protection Act work, referred to in his answer of 27 October, Official Report, column 385.

Mr. Nicholls: The only adjustments to the work priorities of the Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectorates to accommodate this work were an initial reduction in the number of planned inspections and a change in emphasis to concentrate more on pesticide aspects. However, the adoption of further efficiency measures did lead to an increase in the actual number of inspections undertaken during 1987-88.

Fire Precautions

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will state the original target date for the completion of the inspection and certification of fire precautions at the United Kingdom's 1,500 most potentially dangerous work places.

Mr. Nicholls: The Fire Certificates (Special Premises) Regulations 1976 do not require the completion of inspection and certification work by any specific date and no original target date was set.

King's Cross Fire

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the Health and Safety Executive research budget the subsidy given by the Department of Transport for the scientific investigation into the causes of the King's Cross fire, represents.

Mr. Nicholls: The cost of the scientific investigation by the Health and Safety Executive was not subsidised by the Department of Transport. The whole cost was absorbed by the executive's research budget.

Accidents (Statistics)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list the accident rates by company size for 1978, 1979, 1985, 1986, and 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The only information analysed by the Health and Safety Executive on the relationship between accident rates and company size concerns employees in manufacturing establishments in 1985. This was published in Health and Safety Statistics 1984-85. I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will state the proportion of accidents in the construction industry in 1978, 1979, 1980, 1986 and 1987 of employed and self-employed workers.

Mr. Nicholls: The relative percentages of employees and self-employed in the construction industry who were reported as receiving fatal or major injuries are set out in the table. For the self-employed working on their own, fatal injuries (and for 1985 and earlier years major injuries) are not reportable and are therefore excluded.

Fatal and major injuries in the construction industry (SIC 80, division 5) reported to all enforcement authorities, including local authorities

	Percentage
	Employees	Self-employed
1981	97	3
1982	97	3
1983	97	3
1984	96	4
1985	95	5
1986-87[1]	86	14
1987-88[1]	85	15

Notes:

(a) The definition of major injuries was introduced in the Notification of Injuries and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 (NADOR). The definition applies for 1981 to 1985. Subsequent figures are as defined in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR). The definition of a major injury is broader under RIDDOR than under NADOR and thus figures for 1986-87 and 1987-88 are not comparable with those for earlier years.

(b) Enforcing authorities responsible for enforcing the NADOR and RIDDOR Regulations are the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates and local authorities.

(c) The relative percentages of injuries to employees and self-employed will be affected by their relative percentages in the workforce, also shown in the table, by differences in the range of activities in which they are engaged, and by differences in the propensity to report injuries.

Nursing Advisers

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment nursing advisers are employed by the Health and Safety Executive's medical division; and how many posts are currently unfilled.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 December 1988, 24 employment nursing advisers were employed in Health and Safety Executive's medical division and three full-time and four part-time posts were unfilled.

One successful candidate from a recent recruitment exercise has taken up an offer of employment, and offers to two further candidates will be made shortly. Further recruitment is planned.

Pesticides

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how long he estimates it will take for the Health and Safety Executive to process the 300 outstanding applications for approval on non-agricultural pesticides under the Control of Pesticides Regulation 1986.

Mr. Nicholls: The executive aims to process all outstanding applications before the end of 1989.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many fixed work places he estimates are not registered with the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive does not keep estimates of the number of unregistered fixed work places.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many firms he expects will become aware of the Health and Safety Executive's leaflets "Don't Wait Until an Inspector Calls", "500 Dead", and "Essential For Small Firms"; and how many firms will not be aware of these leaflets as they are not registered.

Mr. Nicholls: It is impossible to estimate how many firms will have seen those leaflets, although over a millon copies have been distributed since 1986. The leaflets were in part aimed at encouraging a higher level of registration, and the number of premises registered with Her Majesty's factory inspectorate has increased steadily for the last three years.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many Health and Safety Executive specialist inspectors are employed in each of the main specialist disciplines; and how many vacancies there are in each of those disciplines.

Mr. Nicholls: The information required is as follows (1 December 1988 figures):

Specialist disciplines	Number of specialist inspectors	Number of vacancies
Explosives	13	2
Construction engineering	20	9
Mechanical engineering	54	11
Chemical (including biotechnology)	86	9
Electrical engineering	22	4

Following a recent recruitment exercise it is expected that 16 specialists will join HSE. A further exercise is under way.

HEALTH

Community Care

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will implement the proposal in the Griffiths report in respect of closing long-stay hospitals, that no one should be discharged without a clear package of care, and without someone acting as care manager; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We are currently considering this and Sir Roy's other recommendations and will bring forward our own proposals in due course. General guidance on the development of community care services, including services for people discharged from long-stay hospitals, is already available in the planning guidelines circular HC(88)43.

North East Thames Health Authority

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will allocate additional resources to North East Thames regional health authority to deal with the consequences of having to treat patients at risk from the MRSA bacterium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is for health authorities to decide how to meet, from within the funds available to them, the cost of infection control in hospitals from whatever source, and the care and treatment of those infected.

Asbestosis

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the numbers in each of the last five years of (a) men and (b) women found to be suffering from asbestosis or bilateral diffuse pleural thickening; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Comprehensive information about the numbers of sufferers from these diseases is not collected centrally. The estimated number of in-patient cases treated in NHS hospitals with a main diagnosis of asbestosis is given in the table.

England 1981-85

	Males	Females
1981	110	10
1982	80	20
1983	140	10
1985	100	20

This information is based on a 10 per cent. sample of patient discharge records and because of the small numbers involved the results should be treated with caution. The annual report of the Health and Safety Executive in its tables of cases of occupational diseases awarded benefit includes figures on those suffering from asbestosis and bilateral pleural thickening. A copy of the report is in the Library of the House.

Action on Smoking and Health

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the current balance between the public and private funding of Action on Smoking and Health; and if he has any plans to encourage the organisation to increase its funding from private and voluntary sources;

(2) what is the cost to public funds of Action on Smoking and Health in the current financial year; and what grants he intends to make to it in 1989-90;

(3) what evaluation of the effectiveness of his Department's grant to Action on Smoking and Health there has been since such grants were made available.

Mr. Freeman: We expect that the total cost to public funds of support for Action on Smoking and Health in 1988-89 will be £230,000; this amount being a grant from the Department of Health under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968. Under a three-year agreement lasting until 1990-91 the section 64 grant in 1989-90 will be paid at the current level, with the possibility of an additional amount to reflect inflation, subject to the overall sum being a 1 per cent. reduction in real terms over the amount paid in 1988-89. The final grant level would be subject to agreement by Ministers. No other Government support is currently planned.

We wish to see ASH becoming less reliant on Government funding and this has been the subject of discussions with the organisation. Following these discussions ASH has set targets for increased fund raising which will lead to a reduction in the proportion of its funding which it receives from Government sources. ASH has received Government funding since 1971 and has grown into an effective adjunct to successive Governments' campaigns against smoking. Over that period the prevalence of regular cigarette smoking by adults in the United Kingdom has falledn from 46 per cent.

to 33 per cent. ASH's plans and achievements are reviewed yearly. It is currently expanding its activities in assisting employers design workplace smoking policies. This is an activity which the Government welcome and encourage. ASH has also developed an extremely useful database on smoking policy matters. I believe the Department gets very good value for the support it gives to ASH.

Anti-Smoking Campaigns

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to monitor the effectiveness of the Health Education Authority's campaigns against smoking.

Mr. Freeman: Each of the individual projects in the Health Education Authority's smoking programme is separately evaluated by the authority. Advertising against smoking takes place within the "Look After Your Heart" campaign and this is monitored through regular tracking studies. The authority's activity in connection with nationa' no smoking day is also monitored separately. This showed that in 1988, 92 per cent. of the population were aware of national no smoking day, with about 2·5 million smokers taking part. Follow-up to 1986 No Smoking Day suggests that up to 50,000 smokers may have given up permanently.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total expenditure by the Health Education Authority on anti-smoking campaigns in the current financial year; and what expenditure it intends to make on campaigns in this area in 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: Expenditure by the Health Education Authority on anti-smoking campaigns in 1988-89 will be £1,334,000. No significant change of expenditure is intended for 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the Health Education Authority's budget is spent on anti-smoking campaigns in the current financial year; and how he expects this to change in 1989-80.

Mr. Freeman: The Health Education Authority plans to spend about 6 per cent. of its total budget in 1988-89 on anti-smoking campaigns. No change is proposed for 1989-90.

Residential Homes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made to the effect of the increase in mortgage rates on the manning and financing of residential homes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether his Department has any evidence as to whether the loss of nurses' posts in registered residential homes is related to the financial difficulties imposed on the management of such homes as a result of recent increases in mortgage repayments.

Mr. Freeman: We do not have information available which would enable us to assess the effects on the operation of residential homes of changes in mortgage payments. Any nursing care required in residential care homes should be provided by the local community nursing service or under its supervision; these homes do not need to have nurses' posts.

NHS Professional and Technical Councils

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the professions, occupations and disciplines covered by each individual committee or pay review body linked to National Health Service professional and technical councils A and B;

(2) what were the annual percentage pay awards to the National Health Service staff covered by each individual committee or pay review body linked to professional and technical councils A and B in each year since 1981;

(3) how many National Health Service staff are covered by each individual committee or pay review body linked to professional and technical councils A and B;

(4) what is the starting, top and mid-point of each salary scale for National Health Service staff covered by each individual committee or pay review body linked to professional and technical councils A and B.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Identity Cards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has investigated, or is currently studying, the usefulness of a national identity card to his departmental responsibilities; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes, but I do not believe that my departmental responsibilities are the crucial factor in determining the desirability of a national identity card. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 15 December column 1080.

Anti-smoking Campaign

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what expenditure his Department makes on anti-smoking campaigns other than in grants to Action on Smoking and Health and the Health Education Authority in the current year; and what expenditure is planned in this area in 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: Other than money made available to the Health Education Authority and Action on Smoking and Health, the Department did not separately spend any money on specific anti-smoking campaigns in 1988-89 although the "Look After Your Heart" campaign did include a component of advice on giving up smoking. Consideration is currently being given to a campaign to discourage teenage smoking. The amount of expenditure this might involve has not yet been decided.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will reconsider his decision not to appoint to the Health Education Authority a fund raiser to encourage an increase in the organisation's income from non-governmental sources.

Mr. Freeman: Individual positions within the Health Education Authority are a matter for the authority itself. However, I understand that the authority has begun to work with industry and other bodies to bring about increased opportunities to promote health education messages and during the past year has been successful in developing a number of commercial associations. The authority has recently appointed a commercial manager to develop these areas of co-operation further.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the budget of the Health Education Authority is funded from non-governmental sources.

Mr. Freeman: About 0·7 per cent. of the 1988-89 budget of the Health Education Authority is funded from non-governmental sources. These non-governmental funds are derived from the sale of publications and sponsorship. In 1988-89 this is likely to be about £160,000.

No Smoking Day

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what he estimates will be the cost to public funds of national no smoking day 1989.

Mr. Freeman: National no smoking day is financed from a number of public and voluntary sector and international sources. Public sector support from English sources for the 1989 event is limited to a grant from the Health Education Authority of £112,000.

Disabled People

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that rights of representation and advocacy are being provided adequately for individuals whose cases are assessed under the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Mellor: It is good practice for the views of disabled people and their carers to be taken into account when local authorities are assessing the need for services. Sections 1 and 2 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 seek to give this statutory force through regulations covering the appointment and rights of authorised representatives to act on behalf of a disabled person. Six key sections of the Act are already in force, but sections 1 and 2 are among those still to be implemented. We have always said that the remaining sections of the Act will be implemented as and when the resources required have been identified and made available. Discussions are taking place with the local authority associations, who have indicated that they see these provisions of the Act as having resource implications.

Organ Transplants (Donor Cards)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will estimate the number of people whose organs are likely to be suitable for donation for transplant who are currently carrying donor cards;

(2) if he will estimate the number of people who have died in hospital whose organs would have been suitable for transplant but where no donation was made during the last five years; and if he will list the principal reasons for such action not being taken.

Mr. Freeman: The basic information required to form reliable estimates of the number of potential organ donors is not yet available. On 1 January 1989, health authorities in England will begin a survey which should provide a clearer picture of the total potential and the reasons why donation sometimes does not take place. For further details of this initiative, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 13 December 1988 at column 555.

Different sample surveys produce varying estimates of donor card ownership, but it appears likely that between 20 and 30 per cent. of the general public posess a donor card.

Meningitis

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths due to meningitis have been recorded in each of the past five years.

Mr. Freeman: Meningitis may be caused by many different organisms. I assume that my hon. Friend is interested particularly in meningococcal meningitis, and the table gives the number of deaths from this cause.

Number of deaths registered with underlying cause assigned as meningococcal meningitis (ICD(9)[1] 036.0). Persons, all ages England and Wales between 1983 and 1988

Note: Due to a change in the coding rules, deaths prior to 1984 may not strictly be comparable with those of later years.
Figures from 1986 exclude deaths at ages under 28 days.

Food (Nutrition Implications)

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance the Ministry has issued, or proposed to issue on the health implications of the consumption of (a) red meat, (b) poultry and turkeys, (c) nitrate fertilised vegetables, (d) fruits subject to pesticide treatment, (e) dairy products, (f) white bread and (g) sugar-based products.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to issue special guidance on the nutrition implications of eating the foods mentioned. Any foods, if eaten in moderation, can contribute to a healthy diet. It is the balance of the diet as a whole which matters. However it is noteworthy that in its report "Nutritional Aspects of Bread and Flour" (HMSO 1981), the chief medical officer's Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy recommended that "the consumption of bread, whether white, brown or wholemeal, should be promoted".

We expect to publish a COMA report on dietary sugars in the course of 1989.

With regard to the safety of particular foodstuffs, whether in relation to the use of fertilisers or pesticides in their production, or to any other factor, we shall continue to advise the public whenever necessary.

Abortions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were carried out in the latest year for which figures are available at 28 weeks, 27, 26, 25, 24, 23, 22, 21, 20, 19 and 18 weeks.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown by age, including girls aged under 16 years, of the numbers and percentages of abortions performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available on pregnancies of 18 weeks or over, and indicate the statutory grounds on which the abortions were performed.

Mr. Freeman: [holding answer 13 December 1988]: The information is shown in the table.

1. The continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk to the life of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.
2. The continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.
3. The continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk or injury to the physical or mental health of any existing child(ren) in the family of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.
4. There is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped.

Certified by the operating practitioner as immediately necessary:

5. In emergency, to save the life of the pregnant woman.
6. In emergency, to prevent grave permanent injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many abortions were performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available; and how many and what percentage of these abortions were performed at 18 weeks or more gestation;

(2) how many and what percentage of the abortions performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available in pregnancies of 18 weeks or more gestation were performed (a) in the private sector, (b) in the National Health Service or (c) by the National Health Service in the private sector under agency arrangements;

(3) how many and what percentage of the abortions performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available on pregnancies of 18 weeks or over were performed upon (a) women normally resident in the United Kingdom and (b) women from overseas;

(4) how many and what percentage of the abortions performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available on pregnancies of 18 weeks or over were performed under each statutory ground;

(5) if he will give a breakdown by (a) numbers of previous children and (b) numbers of previous abortions of the numbers and percentages of abortions performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available at 18 weeks or more gestation;

(6) how many and what percentage of abortions in the latest year for which figures are available were performed in England and Wales upon pregnancies of 18 weeks or more gestation because (a) the child was likely to be born handicapped or (b) the pregnancy had arisen as a result of rape;

(7) how many and what percentage of all abortions performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available upon pregnancies of 18 weeks or more gestation were performed under ground 2 of the Abortion Act.

Mr. Freeman: [holding answer 13 December]: The information is given in the table. Statutory ground four gives the number of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 where there is substantial risk that if the child were to be born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped. Rape is not in itself a statutory ground for abortion, but arrangements have been made to identify separately those notification forms which mention rape. Other abortions may have been performed where rape may have occurred, but we cannot identify these in the statistics.

Notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967, all gestations; 18 completed weeks and over by category of premises, area of usual residence, statutory grounds, number of previous live and still born children, number of previous abortions under the Act, with mention of rape on notification form. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions have so far been performed in England and Wales under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 13 December]: The total number of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 received by the end of August 1988 for terminations performed in England and Wales from 27 April 1968 to 30 June 1988 is 2,899,405. A small number of notifications received after statistics have been compiled for each year are excluded.

Doctors (Discipline)

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors have been (a) struck off, (b) suspended and (c) disciplined in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: The General Medical Council has supplied the following figures:

	Registrations erased (a)	Registrations suspended (b)	Total[1] (c)
1987	7	11	53
1985	13	8	45

1978	4	6	28

[1] Total number of cases considered by the General Medical Council professional conduct committee (formerly the disciplinary committee).

I understand that the General Medical Council would be willing to provide a more detailed breakdown of the result of disciplinary proceedings heard by the professional conduct committee (column (c)) if my hon. Friend wishes to write to it.

Orthoptists (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many orthoptists thre are in the Nottingham district health authority.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally. The hon. Member may care to write to the chairman of Nottingham health authority for the information.

Abortion (Tower Hamlets)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the number of abortions in Tower Hamlets' health authority by method for the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: Statistics relating to legal abortions by district health authority of termination are not published in order to maintain confidentiality.

Medical Accidents

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the working party between his Department and the British Medical Association on alternative forms of compensation for victims of medical accidents was set up; how many times it has met; and when he expects it to report.

Mr. Mellor: No working party to consider alternative forms of compensation for victims of medical accidents has been set up between the Department and the British Medical Association.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now update his estimate contained in his answer of 16 November 1987, Official Report, column 433, of the proportion of people infected with HIV who will go on to develop AIDS in the light of the Cox report on HIV infection.

Mr. Mellor: We accept the statement in the Cox report that "The proportion of people infected with HIV who will eventually develop AIDS is uncertain. Some of the recent evidence suggests it is higher than originally thought and may be as high as 80 per cent., or even greater".

The previous reply of 16 November 1987 was in respect of people with haemophilia and HIV infection. It is still not known what proportion of these people with HIV infection will develop AIDS.

Eggs

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of eggs sampled (i) between 1 January and 31 October and (ii) since 31 October; and what were the results regarding the incidence of salmonella enteriditis.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Preliminary information collected by the public health laboratory service in 1988 showed that in an examination of about 2,000 eggs from sources suspected of being associated with salmonella food poisoning, salmonella enteritidis PT4 was cultured from the shells of only seven eggs; from the content only of two eggs and from both shell and contents of two eggs. Because these eggs were selected from suspect flocks they are not representative and no inference can be drawn from these findings about the extent of salmonella contamination of eggs in this country.

In addition, the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service have examined eggs for a number of individual producers on a contractual basis. Individual results are commercially confidential. However, in total around 4,000 eggs were examined to date without any positive results for salmonella.

Births and Deaths (Registration)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken in the light of the Register General's inquiries into the application of the legislation governing the registration of births and deaths to the case of the Carlisle baby; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None. I have no powers in this respect.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list his responsibilities under the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953, and for action in respect of non-compliance with the terms of the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953.

Mr. Freeman: The Home Secretary has no responsibilities under the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health's responsibilities under the Act are confined to approving regulations made by the Registrar General prescribing anything which by that Act is required to be prescribed.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he has received a report from the Registrar General into application of the Births and Deaths Registration Act in the case of the Carlisle baby.

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

Infant Feeding

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the guidelines on infant feeding based on the health report entitled "Present Day Practice in Infant Feeding: Third Report from the Chief Medical Officer's Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy".

Mr. Freeman: This was published on 19 December and is available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office (ISBN 0 11 321181 3).

Unemployment (Mortality)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why it was decided to exclude the table linking unemployment to mortality from the 1986 "Social Trends", published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 25 November 1988]: No such table was proposed for "Social Trends" 16 by the Central Statistical Office, which edits this publication.

Operations (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Robert McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the numbers of people on waiting lists for hip operations, kidney transplants, eye operations, varicose vein operations, cosmetic surgery, heart operations and heart and lung transplants in England and Wales, at the latest time for which statistics are available; what was the comparable figure for the same period last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 20 November 1988]: We collect waiting list information centrally by specialty rather than by type of operation. This is available in the Library. However, separate figures for patients waiting for kidney, heart or combined heart and lung transplants are notified to the United Kingdom transplant service, for the United Kingdom as a whole. This information is provided in the table.

Questions about waiting lists in Wales are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Patients waiting for Transplants in the United Kingdom

	25 November 1987	25 November 1988
Kidney	3,271	3,491
Heart or heart/lung	338	396

The number of transplants of these organs carried out from 1 January to 25 November 1988 is approximately 9 per cent. higher than in the comparable period in 1987.

Diet

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice his Department issues on the eating of (a) chips and (b) eggs and as to whether they constitute part of a healthy diet.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 13 December]: Any food, in moderation, can constitute part of a healthy diet. It is the balance that matters. The Department issues no specific nutritional advice about chips and eggs. However, chips may contribute substantially to dietary fat. The Chief Medical Officer's Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy advise, and we accept, that consumption of fat by the population as a whole should be reduced.

With regard to the risk of salmonella and eggs I refer the hon. Member to the statement made to the House by my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State, on 5 December at column 19.

Smoking

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of deaths from lung cancer he attributes to smoking; and how many such deaths occurred in people under 65 years, and in all age groups, in the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 16 December 1988]: It is not possible to be precise, but it is estimated that at least 90 per cent. of deaths from cancer of the lung is attributable to smoking[1]. The table gives the remaining information requested. The death rate for all males is falling, whilst that for all females is rising.

[3] Statistics for 1986 and 1987 exclude deaths at age under 28 days.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of acute beds in National Health Service hospitals and the total number of in-paitent bed days per annum he estimates are used by patients who are suffering from smoking-induced illnesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 16 December 1988]: The available information for the main diseases associated with smoking is given in the table. Not all illness from these diseases is attributable to smoking. In particular, smoking is only one of a number of causes of ischaemic heart disease.

Estimated average daily number of occupied beds and total in-patient days, by selected diagnoses, NHS acute sector, England 1985

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the percentage of out-patients at chest clinics who attend as a result of smoking-induced illnesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 16 December]: We do not collect centrally diagnostic out-patient information.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many amputations are carried out each year as a result of peripheral vascular disease caused by smoking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 16 December 1988]: The publication, "Amputation Statistics for England, Wales and Northern Ireland 1987", a copy of which is in the Library, contains figures on the number of amputations of various limbs as a result of several forms of vascular insufficiency, but we do not collect centrally information on whether or not the amputee smoked.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the National Health Service of smoking-related diseases for the last year for which figures were available.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 16 December 1988]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) on 10 March at columns 339-340.

Leicestershire Health Authority

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will direct the Leicestershire health authority to provide specific and detailed answers forthwith to the Leicestershire community health council and to the "Maternity Unit Must Stay" campaign to the 14 questions of fact set out in the letter to the chairman of the Leicestershire health authority from Mrs. Jane Daw of Wing, Rutland, to which the chairman replied briefly on 10 November declining to provide the information; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 19 December 1988]: Health authorities are required to provide information to community health councils to enable them to carry out their statutory duties. I understand that Leicestershire community health council has not formally sought the information referred to. It would therefore not be right for me to intervene in the way proposed.

Regional Health Authorities (Statutory Duties)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to regional health authorities regarding the need for district health authorities to provide community health councils with full information to enable them to fulfil their statutory duties of keeping under review the operation of the National Health Service; how he monitors the performance of district health authorities in that regard; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 19 December 1988]: We have placed a legal requirement on district health authorities (currently regulation 20 of the Community Health Council Regulations 1985; S.I. 1985, No. 304) to provide CHCs with such information about the planning and operation of health services in their district as they may reasonably require in order to carry out their duties. The regulation also provides for a right of appeal to the relevant regional health authority in case of difficulty. Although we have not instituted any specific monitoring arrangements for this regulation we have not received representations suggesting there is any general problem with its operation.

Benzodiazepines

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prescriptions for benzodiazepines were dispensed by community pharmacists in each of the years 1983 to 1986.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 19 December 1988]: This is the information:

millions

	Number of prescriptions
1983	28·7
1984	28·0
1985	25·7
1986	25·4

Eggs (Salmonella)

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to whether any producers involved in outbreaks of salmonella attributed by him to eggs test their eggs for salmonella and have found them free from infection.

Mr. Clarke [holding answer 19 December]: Because of the probably very low number of eggs infected out of the total production of even an infected flock, a manageable sampling and testing regime in eggs from flocks is unlikely to detect the presence of infection. For example, if only one in 10,000 eggs were infected that would constitute a health risk but no sampling method would be likely to detect that level of infection. Safety cannot be assured by sampling therefore and no flock could be declared salmonella-free unless a large proportion of its output was tested.

Radiation (Royal Devon and Exeter Hospital)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make funds available to pay compensation to patients damaged by excess radiation at the Royal Devon and Exeter hospital.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 19 December 1988]: Health authorities are expected to meet such expenditure from within their own resources.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Eggs

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many eggs have been consumed in the House of Commons Refreshment Department and in what form in (a) the last year for which statistics are available and (b) the last two weeks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Irving: I have been asked to reply.

During the last 12-month period for which figures are available at least 280,000 eggs were used by the Refreshment Department either in the preparation of recipes, or for direct consumption. The Refreshment Department has also recently acquired a supply of liquid pasteurised eggs. In the last two weeks some 14,000 eggs and 4 gallons of liquid eggs have been consumed.

Select Committees

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list in the Official Report the reports of departmental Select Committees in respect of which (a) evidence has been received from the Scottish Office and (b) recommendations have been made regarding matters within the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Scotland, in each Session since 1982-83.

Mr. Wakeham [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The following is the information requested:

Departmentally-related Select Committee	(a) Evidence received from Scottish Office	(b) Recommendations made regarding matters with the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Scotland

DEFENCE

Conventional Forces

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the balance of conventional forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The most recent assessment of the balance of conventional forces in Europe is given in the NATO document "Conventional Forces in Europe: the Facts", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. This confirms that the Warsaw pact currently enjoys numerical superiorities over the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation of about 3:1 in tanks and artillery and 2:1 in combat aircraft.

US Defence Secretary

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the United States Secretary of Defence on the future development of the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Sainsbury: None recently, but there have been a number of ministerial and senior official contacts with the United States Department of Defence in recent months on various aspects of the SDI programme.

Food Distribution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has considered using members of the armed forces stationed in Britain to assist charities in distributing the free Common Market food to the needy; and whether he has assessed whether this could be a useful training exercise should a similar procedure need to be undertaken during a wartime or national crisis.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. This form of assistance would not meet the criteria laid down in the well-established military aid to the civil community scheme, under which in certain circumstances military aid may be provided to civil agencies. This is primarily because there would be no training benefit, since we would not envisage using service men in this way during wartime, and it is not our practice to train service men specifically for disaster relief.

Submarine Exercises

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names and dates of bilateral US Navy-Royal Navy submarine and anti-submarine exercises held since 1981.

Mr. Hamilton: Aside from NATO exercises, the Royal Navy and United States Navy take part in a number of exercises held under national auspices each year, to which other allies are frequently also invited. Details of these exercises in the form requested are classified. In addition, ships and submarines of both navies take part in passage exercises whenever the opportunity arises. These are arranged locally by the vessels involved and information on them is not held centrally.

Satellites

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the cost and purpose of the satellite launched on an Ariane rocket on 11 December.

Mr. Sainsbury: The satellite was Skynet 4B, the first in a planned series of three military communications satellites. The estimated cost of the programme is £360 million at average 1987-88 outturn prices, including launch and ground support costs.

Force and Arms Reductions

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans for discussions with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Warsaw pact on asymmetrical force and arms reductions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is likely that new negotiations on conventional forces in Europe involving the 23 NATO and Warsaw pact countries will begin soon; there will be a need for heavily asymmetrical reductions in key weapons systems by the countries of the Warsaw pact to redress current imbalances. The global ban on chemical weapons already under negotiation in the conference on disarmament will also require far greater reductions by the Warsaw pact countries than the countries of NATO.

INF Aircraft

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what trends have been observed in the numbers of Warsaw pact shorter-range INF aircraft in Europe over the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to figure 1 on page 3 of Volume 1 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988, Cm. 344-I. We have not noted any significant changes in the number of SRINF aircraft over the last two years, although the process of replacing the more elderly SRINF aircraft with the modern Fencer and Fulcrum has continued.

Offensive Air Power

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the inclusion of discussions about offensive air power in the conventional stability talks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom is not opposed in principle to the inclusion in the conventional stability talks of any of the conventional capabilities of forces in the Atlantic to Urals area. However, NATO's proposals will concentrate on those land forces, such as armour and artillery, with the capacity to seize and hold territory, which represents the core of an offensive capability.

Nimrod Fleet

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his practice to answer questions on deployment of the Royal Air Force Nimrod fleet.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Emergency Diversion Airfield

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate has been made of the cost of transferring the military emergency diversion airfield facility for RAF Lossiemouth to RAF Kinloss.

Mr. Neubert: It is estimated that the transfer of military emergency diversion airfield (MEDA) responsibility from RAF Lossiemouth to RAF Kinloss will result in a net saving of some £3 million over 10 years.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current cost of fitting rotary hydraulic arrester gear at an emergency diversion airfield.

Mr. Neubert: The cost of installing rotary hydraulic arrester gear (RHAG) varies from site to site dependent upon the works services required. It is estimated that the cost of installing rotary hydraulic arrester gear (RHAG) at RAF Kinloss will be some £400,000.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate has been made of likely civilian job losses at RAF Lossiemouth when its military emergency diversion airfield facility is transferred to RAF Kinloss; and what will be the total cost of paying voluntary redundancy payments.

Mr. Sainsbury: Eleven civilian firemen posts will be lost; of the 11 posts lost, eight will be made redundant all on voluntary terms. The total cost of voluntary redundancy payments is estimated at £168,000.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in the past five years RAF Lossiemouth has been used as a military emergency diversion airfield, showing these figures for (a) civilian and (b) military aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: In the last five years RAF Lossiemouth has been used as an emergency diversion airfield on 311 occasions. Fifty-one of these diversions were by civil aircraft and 260 by military aircraft.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate has been made of jobs likely to be created for civilians following upon the establishment of RAF Kinloss as a military emergency diversion airfield; and if these can be shown according to support tasks.

Mr. Sainsbury: No additional posts, military or civilian, will be created at RAF Kinloss following the transfer of the military emergency diversion airfield task from RAF Lossiemouth.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have been held between his Department and representatives of local authority fire services to ensure that the brigade can meet required response times, including during silent hours, for the proposed military emergency diversion airfield facility at RAF Kinloss.

Mr. Neubert: The proposed military emergency diversion airfield facility at RAF Kinloss will not alter required response times for the local authority fire services. The need for discussions does not therefore arise.

The Royal Air Force has a standing requirement for liaison between RAF and local authority fire services and joint exercises are carried out at regular intervals.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training facilities will be offered to civilians recruited to RAF Kinloss prior to, and following upon, its establishment as a military emergency diversion airfield.

Mr. Neubert: There will be no civilians recruited to RAF Kinloss specifically as a result of its designation as a military emergency diversion airfield. The question of training does not therefore arise.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the official category of RAF Lossiemouth following upon the transfer of its military emergency diversion airfield facility to RAF Kinloss in June 1989.

Mr. Neubert: When RAF Lossiemouth ceases to be designated a military emergency diversion airfield in June 1989, it will continue as an operational flying station within 18 Group of Strike Command.

Museum of Artillery

Mr. Cartwright (Woolwich): To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on proposals to transfer the Museum of Artillery and the Royal Artillery archives from Woolwich to Larkhill.

Mr. Neubert: At present, the various buildings occupied by the three Royal Artillery Museums at Woolwich do not permit the complete collection of artifacts to be properly displayed. Furthermore, the potential for expansion of the museums both in terms of exhibits and the number of visitors who may be attracted to them is extremely limited. As a consequence, the museum authorities are examining various proposals for a new museum where all the present collection and archives can be relocated and where it will be possible to attract larger number of visitors. Discussions have taken place with the Ministry of Defence on the possibility of siting the new museum at Larkhill. However, these are at an early stage and no decisions have been taken either by the Ministry of Defence or the museum authorities.

Falkland Islands (Food)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all the fresh produce that is shipped to the Falkland Islands is entirely consumed by service personnel; and what is the wastage rate of fresh produce shipped to the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Fresh produce shipped to the Falkland Islands is almost entirely consumed by service personnel, the only exceptions being supplies issued to the King Edward Memorial hospital and families occupying married quarters in Mount Pleasant. Issues to the hospital ensure that the dietary needs of all civilian and service patients are met. In both cases issues are made at full repayment rates. Stringent quality control ensures that the wastage rate of fresh produce shipped to the Falklands is very small.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of specialist catering staff involved in the distribution of foodstuffs on the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Distribution of foodstuffs on the Falklands is carried out by the RAOC Ration Platoon. The platoon are not caterers, but include in their establishment a petty officer and a leading cook who liaise with the Royal Navy afloat. RAF Mount Pleasant is responsible for catering support throughout Mount Pleasant complex and employs one NCO and four aircrew to distribute food commodities to the various catering outlets.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions mess funds on the Falkland Islands have had to be compensated from central funds due to errors in the distribution system of foodstuffs.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Royal Ordnance

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in the last 12 months discussions have been held with Royal Ordnance in which the subject of the wartime needs of his Department have been mentioned.

Mr. Sainsbury: Procurement to meet peacetime and wartime needs is kept under continuing review and, where appropriate, includes discussions with Royal Ordnance. The needs are one of the aspects which is considered in many discussions.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the number and (b) the different types of manufacturing capabilities whose retention has been considered with Royal Ordnance since its sale to British Aerospace.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to him on 30 November 1988, at column 296.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any consideration was given to applying for outline planning permission for any of the Royal Ordnance sites prior to their sale to British Aerospace.

Mr. Sainsbury: Before the sale of Royal Ordnance plc, the company had submitted outline planning applications in respect of land which it had identified as surplus to requirements at its Waltham Abbey and Enfield, North sites. Bidders for the company were aware of this.

Industrial Base (Wartime)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his staff are engaged in monitoring how changes in the defence industrial base influence its ability to meet the requirements of British armed forces in the event of war.

Mr. Sainsbury: All staff involved in procuring equipment for the armed forces are aware of the importance of safeguarding vital sources of supply and of the military need for specific industrial capabilities. The potential effects of industrial procurement decisions on the defence industrial base are examined on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria exist for determining the ability of the United Kingdom defence industrial base to meet the wartime needs of his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our procurement policy supports deterrence by providing our armed forces at all times with effective and reliable equipment. Value for money considerations include the ability of the United Kingdom defence industrial base to meet both or present and potential future requirements, as described in defence Open Government Document 83/01.

Royal Air Force Museum

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to ensure that all the best qualified groups have been given an opportunity to tender for the redevelopment of his Department's site at Graham park; and if he will ensure that no decision is made about any tender until the fullest consultations have taken place between his Department, the local authority and the trustees of the Royal Air Force museum.

Mr. Neubert: Hendon East camp is being sold following public tender. A national firm of agents has conducted a programme of advertising in the property press and circulated potential purchasers to ensure that all those who might wish to tender were given the opportunity to do so.

The Ministry of Defence has consulted with the local authority on the production of a planning brief for the site, but it will be for the eventual purchaser to obtain planning permission in the normal way before undertaking development. Negotiations with a preferred tenderer are proceeding. I am aware of the concerns of the trustees of the RAF museum.

Battle Tank

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the procurement of a new main battle tank for the Army.

Mr. Younger: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made in the House today on the replacement of the Chieftain tank.

In my statement, I pointed out that precise criteria for performance and technical achievement have been established against which the success of the demonstration phase will be measured. The requirements of the demonstration phase are in summary as follows:

(a) to demonstrate overall vehicle performance in prototype tanks;
(b) to demonstrate successful integration at bench level;
(c) to demonstrate weapon system performance;
(d) to demonstrate armour performance;
(e) to achieve successful proof firing of the CHARM gun;
(f) to demonstrate fightability;
(g) to demonstrate system accuracy;
(h) to produce an acceptable risk assessment;
(i) to produce an acceptable reliability analysis;
(j) to specify equipment, stores and facilities which the Ministry of Defence would be called upon to supply;
(k) to demonstrate that the improved ammunition round can be successfully developed.

The requirements will be specified in detail in the contract with the company.

Written Answers to Questions

TRANSPORT

London Underground (Safety)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further steps he is taking (a) to reduce overcrowded carriages on the London underground and (b) to increase safety against personal attack or accidents at stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Since October 1986 investment of over £100 million has been approved on measures to relieve overcrowding in addition to the modernisation of the Central line at a cost of some £720 million. More is in the pipeline and the central London rail study is developing a strategy to relieve congestion and cater for the forecast growth to the end of the century. As regards passenger security and safety, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 20 December and to the statement by the Secretary of State on 10 November at column 496.

Light Dues

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to bring United Kingdom light dues into line with the rest of the European Economic Community by 1992.

Mr. Portillo: Each European Community country is permitted to charge for services, and light dues are a charge for a service which the Government believe the users should, as far as is practicable, continue to meet.

Ports

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the extent to which British ports are at a disadvantage in relation to many European competitors, as a result of the level of subsidies received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: There is competition with continental ports in deep sea trade. The volume of transhipment via Belgian and Dutch ports doubled between 1976 and 1984, and in 1984 to 1986 was about 10 per cent. of United Kingdom deep sea trade, 5 per cent. of all United Kingdom international sea trade. The relative importance in transhipment of state assistance to continental ports and of other factors cannot be reliably estimated.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for transport what is his policy towards the financing and operation of ports in the light of the Carossino report to the European Parliament, (Document A 2-0215/8) of 17 October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The report commented on many matters. I welcome its call for action to secure transparency of accounts and fair competition among ports.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish British Rail's 12-month response to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on Network SouthEast.

Mr. Channon: I have today placed a copy of British Rail's response in the Library of the House. In making its initial response to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report in February, British Rail accepted all of the commission's recommendations and set out the action it intended to take. I welcome the steps British Rail has already taken in implementing those recommendations and will continue to monitor progress.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make fresh appointments to London Regional Transport.

Mr. Channon: I have today appointed Mr. Wilfrid Newton, at present chairman of the Hong Kong mass transit railway, to serve as chairman of London Regional Transport for a period of five years from 13 March 1989. I am grateful to Sir Neil Shields for serving as chairman of LRT in the interim.

Railway Lines and Motorways (Usage)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has as to the average daily number of users per mile of (a) InterCity railway lines and (b) motorways.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 19 December 1988]:

(a) The estimated number of passengers per route mile per day on InterCity railways was 12,900 in 1987.

(b) There is no direct information about occupancy rates for vehicles on motorways. The estimated average daily flow of vehicles per mile for all motorways was 44,400 in 1987. We estimate that this volume of vehicle flow would represent approximately 85,000 drivers/passengers per mile per day, with about 80 per cent. of these travelling by car.

Lead-free Petrol

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to encourage the manufacture of cars which may run on lead-free petrol.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 20 December 1988]: Regulations made in September mean that from 1 October 1990 virtually all new cars will have to be capable of running on unleaded petrol. Manufacturers have already made considerable progress towards meeting this binding requirement. In the first nine months of 1988, only 18 per cent. of the new petrol-engined vehicles sold were in the leaded only category.

Vehicle Sales

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of (a) new petrol-engined car sales and (b) new diesel-engined car sales, respectively, for each of the last five years in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) the European Economic Community.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 20 December 1988]:

(i) New Registrations: Cars: United Kingdom[1]

Thousand

	Petrol-engined	Diesel-engined	Total[2]
1984	1,780	48	1,828
1985	1,841	68	1,909
1986	1,865	79	1,944
1987	1,984	94	2,079
[3]1988	2,180	105	2,285

[1] Figures are for vehicles with a car body type. Figures for Northern Ireland are available on a slightly different basis from those for Great Britain but this does not significantly affect the United Kingdom totals.

[2] Includes a small number of cars propelled by other means.

[3] The estimate for 1988 is based on registrations in the first 10 months of the year.

(ii) Readily available information about new car registrations for EEC countries does not identify method of propulsion. In any case, information is not available for recent years for all countries and it is therefore not possible to produce EEC totals.

Vehicle Sales

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of light commercial vehicles sales in the United Kingdom, and the proportion of those that were diesel engined, for each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 20 December 1988]:

New registrations: light commercial vehicles: United Kingdom[1]

	Total (thousand)	Percentage diesel
1984	112	24
1985	131	37
1986	160	38
[2]1988	173	46

[1] Figures are for all goods vehicles with a gross vehicle weight under 3·5 tonnes. Figures for Northern Ireland are available on a slightly different basis from those for Great Britain but this does not significantly affect the United Kingdom totals.

[2] The estimate for 1988 is based on registrations in the first 10 months of the year.

M77 Extension

Mr. Jimmy Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of the opposition to the proposed M77 extension, he will halt its construction.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

A public local inquiry into objecting to the A77 Ayr road route proposals was held in Glasgow earlier this year. The reporter has recently submitted part I of his report and I expect the full report to be completed early next year. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will decide whether the road improvement should go ahead when he has considered the full report.

ENVIRONMENT

"Living in Terror"

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implications for his housing policies of the report of the Commission for Racial Equality, entitled "Living in Terror".

Mr. Trippier: We took steps in the Housing Act 1988 to give statutory backing for a code of practice on rented housing, to be prepared by the Commission for Racial Equality. In the same Act, we extended the duty to eliminate racial discrimination and to promote equality of opportunity to the Housing Corporation and to our proposed housing action trusts.

Government Offices (Cambridge)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sums of money he plans to spend on roof repairs to blocks A, B and C of the Government offices at Brooklands avenue, Cambridge; if he has any plans to sell this site to the private sector; and what are the implications of his plans for the staff currently at Newmarket.

Mr. Chope: Roof repairs to blocks A, B and C are estimated to cost £204,000, £52,000 and £25,000 respectively. I will continue to keep the long-term use of the site under review.

Housing

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidance, in the form of planning circulars his Department, is giving to local planning authorities in relation to the provision of low-cost housing;

(2) what guidance in the form of planning circulars his Department gives to local planning authorities in relation to starter homes;

(3) what guidance in the form of planning circulars his Department gives to local planning authorities in relation to increasing the provision of housing for (a) the elderly, (b) the disabled and (c) single persons.

Mr. Chope: The Department has issued no planning guidance dealing specifically with these matters. But within our general guidance on land for housing, contained in planning policy guidance note 3 and circular 15/84, we emphasise that development plans will need to take account of the varied types of housing requirement met by the private sector such as those of single persons, small households and the elderly. We stress also the importance we attach to the provision of low-cost starter homes.

Drinking Water

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which areas of Derbyshire fail to meet the standards set out in the European drinking water directive (Directive 80/778/EEC.)

Mr. Moynihan: Drinking water supplies to Derbyshire do not regularly exceed the standards set in the EC drinking water directive except for supplies to a small part of south Derbyshire which exceed the directive nitrate limit. About 1,000 people receive this water. Remedial programmes are in hand.

Supplies to north west Chesterfield, north Buxton and the area around Ashbourne occasionally exceed the directive limit for iron manganese or aluminium.

Conservation

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, further to his statement on the outcome of the Council of Environment Ministers' meeting in Brussels on 24 November, Official Report, 29 November, columns 200-1, he has assessed whether the implementation of the Berne, Bonn and Ramsar conventions alone would provide an adequate means to protect threatened species and threatened habitats in the European Economic Community.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The best way to achieve effective nature conservation in the European Economic Community is for each member state to implement legislation which meets its own conservation needs, fulfils its international obligations and takes account of its own institutional frameworks and social structures. As I made clear in my previous answer, at the Environment Council on 24 November there was general support for the United Kingdom's view that the Community could most usefully assist member states, where appropriate, to implement fully the Bern, Bonn and Ramsar conventions.

London Dockland Development Corporation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now give his consent to the sale by the London Dockland Development Corporation of the site for a new Roman Catholic church in Surry docks, at the valuation agreed by the corporation and the church authorities, for which the corporation applied in a letter to his Department of 5 November 1987.

Mr. Trippier: Consent was given to LDDC on 20 December 1988.

Waterways (Maintenance)

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report published in May 1987 on the maintenance of the British Waterways Board's waterways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The British Waterways Board is continuing to make good progress in implementing the commission's recommendations and I am placing copies of its second response in the Library of the House.

Improvements in the board's management, structural organisation, information systems, resource allocation, and procedures for project appraisal are being implemented as part of a major four year programme of change to develop a more commercial approach to the waterway business with the optimum balance between in-house work and contracting out. I welcome these changes and the commitment with which board members and staff are carrying them through.

The board has also taken action this year to divest itself of its remaining non-waterway-based freight operations while continuing to promote the use of suitable waterways for private freight transport. Leisure market prospects are being reviewed and means of quantifying the public service role of the BWB network explored. The board's property portfolio is being exploited in line with existing objectives and the scope for further potential has been identified in a study by independent consultants which the board commissioned earlier this year.

I am looking forward to seeing a fully worked up business plan on the basis of the board's current work and to consider the outcome of the property study before deciding on appropriate levels of grant for future years and on the possible changes in financial framework to which the board refers in its response. I shall continue to keep under review the question of the board's ownership of and statutory responsibilities for public road bridges over canals.

The board will aim to produce a final report on the implementation of the commission's recommendations by May 1990 in the light of which I shall make a further statement.

Local Authorities (Development Powers)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet reached a decision on the proposed new economic development powers for local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: We announced our intention in the White Paper "The Conduct of Local Authority Business" to propose a new general, but circumscribed, power to engage in economic development initiatives. We have now reached conclusions about the form of this power in England and Wales. The different existing powers for Scottish local authorities mean that the proposal there will follow a separate timetable.

The new power will greatly simplify the position. At the moment local authorities have no specific powers for economic development spending, but can use a number of other powers. The aim is to make sure expenditure by local authorities can be targeted for maximum benefit.

The new power will be framed as a general power to undertake expenditure to facilitate economic development by others, to manage and turn to account assets acquired by such expenditure, and to make charges in connection with the provision of assets and services under the new powers. Economic development will cover investment in, the setting up or expansion of, or the creation or maintenance of employment in commercial, industrial or public undertakings within their localities. These general powers are intended to replace existing powers to the extent that they are used for these purposes.

The Government are firmly of the opinion, however, that there are certain areas of activity which are not appropriate for local authorities. The general powers will therefore be subject to restrictions to be specified in regulations. The Government will consult locl authorities and others about these regulations.

The present intention is that local authorities themselves should not be able to undertake most direct manufacturing and trading activities, banking, insurance business, investment broking, the media, and the provision of certain professional services such as conveyancing and audit.

Restrictions will also prevent the new powers being used for certain forms of expenditure such as deficit financing and for grants specifically to support wages and salaries. While the new power will be available to all principal local authorities, expenditure on grants, loans and guarantees to businesses conducted with a view to profit will be restricted to areas which have a particular need to promote economic development.

These areas will be detailed in the regulations following consultation and will include at least all those areas which currently benefit from some form of central Government priority. There will be a power to adapt the definitions to changing circumstances.

Uses of the new powers may be capable of constituting "state aids" subject to restriction or notification under articles 92 and 93 of the treaty of Rome. Where this is a consideration, provision will be needed for notification and clearance with the European Commission through the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office.

Local authorities will be required to prepare a separate memorandum account of their activities (both on capital and revenue account) under these new powers. They will be required to consult representatives of the local business community (possibly in the context of the consultations already required under section 134 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988) on their proposals for the use of the new powers. They will also be required to take into account any guidance issued by the Government to promote value for money and consistency between Government and local authority initiatives.

The Government have considered the question of a financial limit on the use of the new power, to which they referred in the White Paper. They do not consider that the new power should lead to any significant change in the level of local authority activity in this field, since it is intended merely to simplify the framework within which this activity takes place. In these circumstances, they have concluded that it would be inappropriate to set any general financial limits on the use of the power: the general financial disciplines to which local authorities are subject will be sufficient.

As a reserve power (to deal, for example, with circumstances where one local authority is distorting the local economy to the disadvantage of neighbouring areas), there will be provision for the Secretary of State to impose a limit on individual authorities' spending under the new power. However, this power is intended as a reserve power, since the Government are not aware of any current circumstances which would justify any use of such a power.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about future management arrangements for the Planning Inspectorate.

Mr. Ridley: I propose to consider whether the planning inspectorate should become an executive agency within my Department. The change to agency status would enable the inspectorate to operate within an agreed framework of objectives and performance targets and would provide for greater management responsibility in the use of resources.

The organisational changes that I envisage would not in any way affect the inspectorate's functions, its policy accountabilty, nor the high standards of integrity and impartiality with which its work is carried out.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the United Kingdom will ratify the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am pleased to announce that the United Kingdom and its dependent territories, together with the European Community and most other member states, ratified the protocol in New York on 16 December. Only France and Belgium had not completed their internal procedures by that date. This means that the necessary ratifications are now in place for the protocol to enter into force as planned on 1 January 1989.

Rate Support Grant

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the accumulated reduction in rate support grant since 1978-79 in England at 1988-89 prices breaking down the figures between (a) 1978-79 and 1979-80, (b) 1978-79 and 1980-81, (c) 1978-79 and 1981-82, (d) 1978-79 and 1982-83, (e) 1978-79 and 1983-84, (f) 1978-79 and 1984-85, (g) 1978-79 and 1985-86, (h) 1978-79 and 1986-87, (i) 1978-79 and 1987-88 and (j) 1978-79 and 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: The figures are shown in the following table:

	RSG £ million	Difference from 1978-79 RSG £ million	Cumulative difference £ million
1978-79	14,323	0	0
1979-80	13,749	574	574
1980-81	13,638	685	1,259
1981-82	12,905	1,418	2,677
1982-83	12,069	2,254	4,931
1983-84	11,605	2,718	7,649
1984-85	11,091	3,232	10,881
1985-86	10,580	3,743	14,624
1986-87	10,124	4,199	18,823
1987-88	10,059	4,264	23,087
1988-89	9,687	4,636	27,723

Notes:

All figures are in 1988-89 prices. The figures for 1978-79 to 1984-85 are final. Those for 1985-86 to 1988-89 are estimates based on the supplementary reports laid before the House on 19 December 1988. The figures exclude payments to bodies specified under 56(9) of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. Such payments are currently about £10 million per year.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish the preliminary results of the non-domestic rating valuation.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 19 December 1988]: We hope to make an announcement early in the new year on the transitional arrangements for giving effect to the non-domestic revaluation and for the introduction of the unified business rate.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responsibility his Department has for ensuring that foodstuffs are safe for human consumption and carry no risk of food poisoning; in what way this responsibility is carried out; how many and what type of staff are required; what is the annual cost to his Department; and what has been the change in the number of staff and the annual cost to his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 15 December 1988]: None.

Water Authorities

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, Official Report, 8 December, column 280, was the total (a) value of the local authorities assets transferred to the water authorities and (b) amount of debt liabilities for which the water authorities took responsibility.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 December 1988]: Figures for the book value of assets inherited from predecessor authorities by the 10 regional water authorities on 1 April 1974 are given in the published accounts of the water authorities for 1974-75, as are figures for debt liabilities taken over. Water authority accounts are laid before Parliament.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, Official Report, 8 December, column 280, he will list (a) the local authorities, (b) the water authorities and (c) the assets involved in the transactions referred to, and the debt liabilities in each case.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The local authorities concerned were those exercising water supply and sewerage functions in England and Wales up to 31 March 1974. The water authorities were the 10 regional water authorities set up under the Water Act 1973. In all, the water authorities took on the responsibilities of nearly 1,600 local undertakings. It would not be possible to draw up a list of those undertakings except at disproportionate cost. No list of the assets transferred from predecessor authorities is available centrally. It is not possible to assign a portion of the related debt to each item of the assets transferred.

Bristol Channel (Pollution)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the existing consents for discharges of sewage, treated or raw, and trade effluent into the Bristol channel, and those applications that are currently awaiting a decision on both the Welsh and the English side.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 December 1988]: This information is not held centrally. The public registers which, in common with other authorities, the Severn Trent, South West, Welsh and Wessex water authorities are required to maintain, contain details of all authorised discharges of sewage and trade effluent to the British channel.

Fire Service

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much in percentage terms each region's ratepayers pay for their fire service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The amount by which ratepayers fund individual services is not known since services are also funded by central Government block grant which is not attributable to individual services.

Hazardous Waste

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to whom copies were sent of (a) the consultation paper on hazardous waste dated 29 June and (b) consultation document (Amendments to Waste Disposal Law), dated 23 November.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The announcement of 29 June setting out the Government's decisions following earlier consultation on waste disposal law amendments, and the follow-up consultation paper dated 23 November 1988 have been placed in the Library of the House. Copies of these papers were widely distributed to interested bodies.

Local Authority Debt

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the result of his meeting at the beginning of December with the Local Authorities Association regarding initial proposals in his recent consultation paper to impose the equal instalment of principal method for repaying local authority debt; whether the alternative proposal of a fixed percentage repayment scheme has superseded his original, preferred method; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The consultation paper issued by my Department on 7 July 1988 proposed that local authority credit liabilities should in future be amortised by charges to revenue account using the "equal instalments of principal" method. At a meeting on 29 November with representatives of the main local authority associations, I undertook to seek their views on an alternative method known as the "reducing balance" method. I am sending to the hon. Member a copy of the official letter dated 2 December by which that undertaking was discharged.

Weedkillers

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in which European Economic Community countries the weedkillers Altrazine and Simazine are permitted and in which they are banned; whether these chemicals find their way into tap water for human consumption; whether they are a health hazard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that Atrazine and Simazine are not prohibited under European Community legislation but member states may prohibit substances nationally if they wish. There is no central registrar of approved or prohibited pesticides for individual member states. Both substances are approved for use in the United Kingdom. Water undertakers in the United Kingdom carry out routine monitoring for pesticides and traces of Atrazine and Simazine have been detected in some drinking water supplies at levels which are not considered to be a health risk.

PRIME MINISTER

Food Production and Safety

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the division of responsibility between the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Health in the area of food production and food safety.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Tiverton (Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop), on 7 December at column 163.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Identity Cards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether his Department has investigated, or is currently studying, the usefulness of a national identity card to his departmental responsibilities; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: No.

Tobacco

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will conduct an inquiry into the change in the number of independent shops retailing tobacco: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: No.

Post Office

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response the Post Office has made to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on Post Office Counters services at Crown offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I am placing in the Library of the House copies of the Post Office's response to the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) on Post Office Counters services at Crown offices published on 23 June 1988 (Cmnd 398). The commission made 80 individual recommendations on various aspects of the operation of Crown offices and wider issues, namely: the organisation of the counters business; its financial management; the market for counters services; pricing; investment; the planning process; quality of service; productivity; management of Crown offices; manpower and industrial relations; the counters network; and automation.

The Post Office has accepted 68 of the commission's recommendations, closely related to the operation of the Crown offices themselves. My Department has now agreed a detailed timetable with the Post Office for the implementation of these recommendations in accordance with the standard procedures for follow-up of MMC reports.

Of the remaining 12 recommendations, the Post Office has rejected one and has reservations or qualifications about 11. Most of these remaining recommendations have implications beyond the immediate subject of the report. These include the impact of potential new business on counters; pricing arrangements with Government clients; the size and composition of the counters network; and automation; on all of which continuing consultation with Government is necessary.

As far as the single recommendation which the Post Office does not accept is concerned—the requirement that long-term client support should be an essential pre-condition to proceeding with installation of a major automation system—the Post Office recognises that client commitment is a desirable objective and will take the extent of this commitment into account in any strategic decisions which are made.

The MMC made several recommendations about the Crown office network, notably recommendation 61 that counters should consider a much more substantial programme of regrading Crown offices. While the Post Office accepts the need for this consideration to be given, along with consideration of other planning options, it has made it clear that no decision will be taken on any regradings beyond the 250 currently planned until the success of the commercial contract and the response of staff in putting forward proposals for cost reduction have been received and evaluated.

I will be monitoring the Post Office's progress in carrying forward appropriate action on the recommendations, on the basis of reports in June 1989 and June 1991. I should like to take this opportunity to convey the Government's gratitude to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for its thorough and valuable investigation.

Inner City Task Forces

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the leaders of the inner city task forces; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Newton: I last met the leaders of the inner city task forces at their conference in Liverpool on 9 December. I discussed with them a wide range of matters relating to their operations and made clear the Government's continuing commitment to the task force initiative.

Advisory Panel on Deregulation

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current membership of the advisory panel on deregulation; and when he will be appointing new members.

Mr. Maude: Three new members have been appointed and will join the panel on 1 January 1989. They are:

Mr. Mike Fisher
Managing Director, Whale Tankers Ltd., Solihull, West Midlands

Mrs. Jenifer Rosenberg
Managing Director, J & J Fashions Ltd., London

Mrs. Celia Urquhart
Managing Director, CU Data Ltd., Glasgow

The existing membership of the Advisory Panel on Deregulation is as follows:

Sir Nigel Mobbs DL (Chairman)
Chairman & Chief Executive, Slough Estates plc, Slough

Mr. Colin Dauris
Chairman & Managing Director, James Dauris & Co. Ltd., London

Mr. George Gray
Chairman & Managing Director, Valley Capital Ltd., Carnforth, Lancashire, and Deputy Chairman, Development Commission

Mrs. Teresa Graham
Senior Manager, Price Waterhouse, Newcastle

Mr. Damon de Laszlo
Chairman, Harwin Ltd., Portsmouth

Mr. Stephen Moss
Director, Grosvenor Securities Ltd. and Drakes Restaurant, London

Mr. Tom O'Connor
Chairman & Managing Director, Elta Plastics, Stockton-on-Tees

Mr. Phillip White
Chairman & Chief Executive, WYKO Group plc, Dudley, West Midlands

The advisory panel has made a useful contribution to the enterprises and deregulation unit's work by advising it on the impact of regulatory requirements on business and enterprise development. I should like to express my gratitude to it and particularly to the four retiring members, Mr. Brian Adgey, Mr. Brian Crack, Mr. Robert Fleeman and Mr. Clive Parritt.

The new appointments will help to ensure the panel's continuing effectiveness as a source of valuable advice.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Steel (Privatisation)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, pursuant to his reply on 8 December, Official Report, column 263, he will list those major companies whose existing shareholders received direct mail shots for the British Steel offer.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 15 December 1988]: No. The mailing list used for the British Steel direct mail shot was obtained through the Department's public relations advisers and the Department does not have a complete list of the companies concerned.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has approved and made an offer of regional selective assistance to Quinton Snack Foods of Skelmersdale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I am not normally able to discuss offers of financial assistance for reasons of commercial confidentiality. Under the circumstances, however, Quintins Snack Foods has agreed that I may inform my hon. Friend that an offer of regional selective assistance has been made to the company, which it has accepted. I hope to make a further announcement in due course.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Identity Cards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Law Officers' or the Lord Chancellor's Departments have investigated, or are currently studying, the usefulness of a national identity card to their departmental responsibilities; and whether he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Home Secretary to a similar question from the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 15 December 1988 at column 1080.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Security

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has information, which he can publish in a form that does not jeopardise national security, which indicates the volume of weapons allegedly supplied by Libya to the Irish Republican Army before and after the bombing of Libya by the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: It would not be in the national interest to disclose detailed information of this nature. However, we have good reason to believe that substantial volumes of weaponry were supplied by Libya to the Provisional Irish Republican Army both before and after the United States bombing of Libya.

South Africa (Military Service)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government about the imprisonment of young South African Christians for refusing to do military service on grounds of conscience, with particular reference to the recent case of Charles Bester.

Mrs. Chalker: None. We understand why some young South Africans choose to refuse to do military service and respect the sincerity of their views. But such decisions are a matter for the individual concerned.

Human Rights

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Soviet authorities expressing reluctance in the United Kingdom to support the proposal of a human rights conference in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1989 without a full solution of the problem of Refuseniks still unable to leave the Soviet Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Soviet authorities are already well aware of our long-standing view that agreement to a Moscow conference on human rights in 1991 is possible only in circumstances of a major improvement in the Soviet human rights performance. There have been encouraging signs recently, including over long-standing refusenik cases. We are currently pressing for more progress.

Namibia

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government plan to contribute to the United Nations group which will monitor Namibia's transition to independence, UNTAG.

Mrs. Chalker: We shall of course be paying in full our assessed contribution to the costs of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG). In addition, we have offered to provide a unit of signallers with their equipment for up to a year to carry out the signals function for UNTAG.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 19 December.

Mrs. Chalker: The Foreign Affairs Council met in Brussels on 19 December. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed the outcome of the mid-term meeting of the GATT Uruguay round in Montreal on 4-9 December. The Council noted that the meeting had made progress in a large number of areas, that agriculture remained the most difficult area, and that all sides would need to show flexibility before the senior officials' meeting in April.

The Council discussed the dispute with the United States over the directive banning imports of hormone-treated meat; agreed on a derogation for pet food, and asked the Commission to explore the possibilities for a negotiated settlement.

The Council adopted guidelines for the 1989 programme of aid to Asia and Latin America, and agreed to early implementation of a new EC-China agreement on textiles. There was further discussion of the Community's external steel regime, and of new financial protocols for Cyprus and Malta. There was a short discussion of follow-up to the Rhodes European Council.

In the margins of the Council, an EC-Yugoslavia Co-operation Council was held, and the EC-Czechoslovakia trade agreement was signed.

In discussion of political co-operation subjects, we agreed that it would now be useful for Troika Foreign Ministers to undertake direct contacts with all parties in the Arab-Israel dispute, including of course Israel and the United States. The aim will be to encourage movement towards direct negotiations in the framework of an international peace conference.

We also endorsed the decision of TREVI Ministers that the EPC working group on judicial co-operation should give early attention to improved cooperation among the member states over matters of extradition procedure.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service Pensions

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there have been any recent changes to the Civil Service occupational pension arrangements.

Mr. Brooke: I am pleased to say that a new Civil Service additional voluntary contribution (AVC) scheme is being introduced with effect from 1 January 1989. The new arrangements will give members of the principal Civil Service pension scheme (PCSPS) who want to make additional voluntary contributions a significantly improved choice about the way in which they can buy increased pension cover, within Inland Revenue limits.

The PCSPS facility for buying added years of reckonable service will continue. But, in addition, members of the PCSPS will have a money purchase option with a choice—between the Equitable Life Assurance Society and the Scottish Widows' Fund and Life Assurance Society, about the financial institution that their contributions are invested with in order to produce additional benefits. Members will have a further choice about the method of investment. Each society will offer with profits and unit-linked investments and each society will provide an option for investment in a building society account (the Woolwich Equitable Building Society in the case of the Equitable; Bristol and West Building Society in the case of Scottish Widows').

The new scheme represents a very positive response, by the Government as employer, to the AVC requirements of the Social Security Act 1986 and to the thrust of that Act and other recent legislation towards improving the choice that individuals have about their pension arrangements and about how their pension contributions are invested. The Civil Service AVC scheme, a copy of which I am placing in the Library, will put the Civil Service pension arrangements in the forefront of AVC provision by occupational pension schemes.

Civil Service Manpower

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 October.

Mr. Major: On 1 October 1988 there were 573,891 staff in post in central Government Departments. Of these, 502,407 were non-industrials and 71,484 were industrials.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish (a) the number of companies providing property to rent which have assistance from the business expansion scheme established by the provision of the Finance Act 1988 and (b) the number of such companies which are currently operating in Wales.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested is not yet available centrally from official sources.

Electricity, Water and Steel

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list advisers and underwriters appointed for foreign purchases of (a) electricity, (b) water and (c) steel; if he will state the cost of the appointments; and which countries are covered by the appointments.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Overseas banks have been appointed as set out below to advise on the desirability and feasibility of overseas offers in connection with the privatisations of British Steel, the water authorities of England and Wales and the electricity supply industry of England and Wales. Overseas advisers for the British Steel privatisation were appointed as lead managers in their territories when it it was decided to proceed with overseas offers or placings in the United States, Canada, Japan and continental Europe, and the underwriters for each of the overseas offers are also listed below. It is not the practice to publish details of individual contracts, but the costs of the British Steel flotation will be reported in due course in the usual way.

Inland Revenue (Staff)

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give, in terms of the number of employees, the turnover of staff in the Inland Revenue for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: During the year to 31 March 1988, 7,050 staff left, of whom 2,340 retired. This is slightly over 10 per cent. of the total staff in post at 1 April 1987.

EC Budget

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the 1989 European Community budget procedures.

Mr. Brooke: The President of the European Parliament declared the 1989 budget adopted on 15 December after the Council's budget committee, at a meeting in Strasbourg, had authorised the President of the Budget Council to accept the level of expenditure which resulted from the Parliament's second reading debate.

The 1989 budget amounts to 46,423 mecu (£32,250 million) in commitments and 44,838 mecu (£31,150 million) in payments, respectively 2,052 mecu (£1,426 million) and 2,047 mecu (£1,422 million) below the overall expenditure ceilings in the financial perspective, which forms part of the inter-institutional agreement (IIA) between the Council, the Parliament and the Commission. Provision for expenditure on agricultural market support is 26,761 mecu (£18,590 million), almost 1,900 mecu (£1,320 million) less than the limit set by the financial guideline calculated in accordance with the budget discipline decision. Non-compulsory expenditure totals 13,848 mecu (£9,620 million) in commitments and 12,241 mecu (£8,504 million) in payments. These figures are 19·5 per cent. and 21·0 per cent. respectively higher than in the 1988 budget, reflecting the significant increase in the structural funds agreed at the February European Council. Provision for the United Kingdom's abatement under the Fontainebleau arrangements is 1,780 mecu (£1,237 million).

Taking account of a provisional surplus of 2,000 mecu (£1,390 million) carried forward from 1988, the own resources called up for the 1989 Budget represent 1·03 per cent. of Community GNP, compared with the relevant annual sub-ceiling in the new own resources decision of 1·17 per cent.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Litter Offences

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many people were prosecuted for litter offences in the latest year for which figures are available and as to the average fine.

Mr. John Patten: The information available centrally indicates that there were 1,890 prosecutions for litter offences in 1987 and the average fine was £35.

Graffiti

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many people were prosecuted for offences related to graffiti in the latest year for which figures are availble and as to the average fine.

Mr. John Patten: It is not possible from the information held centrally to indentify prosecutions which relate to graffiti. Such offences will be included under the general offence of criminal damage.

Exclusion and Attendance Orders

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost of imposing (a) an exclusion order and (b) an attendance order upon a convicted criminal.

Mr. John Patten: The average cost of the operation of an attendance centre order in 1987, the latest year for which information is available, is estimated to have been £117. The operation of a football exclusion order (under section 30 of the Public Order Act 1986) does not in itself give rise to any cost to public funds. The cost to the police of enforcing compliance with an order of either sort varies widely from one case to another, and is not recorded in a way which allows an average to be calculated.

Student Visas

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish details of the number of applications for student visas received at the British post in Colombo for the last five years for (a) Tamil and (b) Singhalese applicants and the numbers of visa applications refused and granted for the same categories.

Mr. Renton: The information available centrally is given in the following table.

Applications in Colombo for a student visa[1]

Number of persons

	Newly received[2]	Applications Granted[3]	Refused initially[4]
1985 30 May to December	n/a	500	240[4]
1986	n/a	630	200[4]
1987 January-June	n/a	180	70
July-December	440	320	120
1988 January-September	700	440	180

n/a = not available.

[1] The visa requirement for Sri Lankan citizens was introduced on 30 May 1985.

[2] Including applications subsequently withdrawn.

[3] Granted initially or on appeal.

[4] 210 applications were refused in the period September 1985 to July 1986, of which 150 were from Tamils. Similar information is not available for other periods.

Delia McCall

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the sentence of Delia McCall who is in Cookham Wood closed prison.

Mr. John Patten: No. The appropriate sentence in a particular case is entirely for the courts to decide in the light of all the relevant circumstances and subject to the right of appeal, which Delia McCall has exercised. I am not aware of any circumstances which would justify my right hon. Friend in recommending interference with the sentence imposed on her.

Prisons (Food)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average weekly cost of food for a prisoner.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The average weekly cost of food for an inmate in 1987-88 was £6·36.

Prisoners (Suicide)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides and attempted suicides there were in Armley prison, Leeds in (a) 1986, (b) 1987 and (c) from 1 January 1988 to 31 November 1988; and how many were (i) remand prisoners and (ii) under the age of 18 years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There were no suicides at Leeds prison during 1986; two during 1987, of which one was by a remand inmate and neither by an inmate under 18; and three between 1 January and 30 November 1988, all by remand inmates, one of whom was under 18. There has also been one apparent suicide, yet to be confirmed as such by an inquest, during the latter period; the inmate concerned was on remand and was not under 18.

Thirteen attempted suicides were reported at Leeds prison during 1986, nine during 1987, and seven during 1988 up to 30 November. Information on the age and status of those involved is not normally held centrally, but I am aware that two of the attempts during 1988 were by inmates under 18.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides there were in British prisons from 1 January 1986 to 31 October 1988; and how many were of (i) remand prisoners and (ii) under the age of 18 years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information in respect of suicides in prison establishments in England and Wales is given in the table below.

	Total number of suicides	Suicides by remand prisoners	Suicides by prisoners under 18 years
1986	17	10	0
1988 (to 31 October 1988)	[1]29	[2]18	2

[1] Includes eight apparent suicides which have yet to be confirmed as suicide by coroners' inquests.
[2] Includes three apparent suicides which have yet to be confirmed as such by coroners' inquests.

Non-metropolitan Areas (Policing)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from chief constables on the steps they are taking to tackle outbreaks of disorder in non-metroplitan areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Following incidents of serious disorder in 1986 and over the 1987 new year period a working group comprising Home Office officials and representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers was set up to consider means of improving police response to public disorder in areas where rapid mobilisation of resources may be difficult.

The group has recently reported its findings and made a number of recommendations. I have placed a full list of the group's recommendations in the Library. The recommendations relate to ways that forces might be able to improve information gathering and collation to help predict the likelihood and degree of disorder; how contingency planning for the rapid mobilisation and deployment of officers could be sharpened up; how the operational tactics in confronting disorderly groups could be made more effective; and how following an outbreak of disorder procedures could be improved to detect offenders and bring them to justice.

With the agreement of the Association of Chief Police Officers I am circulating a copy of the report to all chief officers in England and Wales asking them to consider its recommendations to help inform their decisions on how best to tackle this sort of disorder in their areas.

Armley Prison

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average age of remand prisoners currently in Armley.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 8 December 1988]: The readily available information is given in the following table.

Untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners[1] held in Leeds prison on 30 June 1988: by age and type of prisoner

Age	Untried	Convicted unsentenced
17-20	237	39
21-24	123	19
25-29	133	7
30-39	95	8
40-49	48	5
50-59	16	1
60 and over	6	—
All ages	658	79

[1] The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate: detailed checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners remanded in Armley prison since January have not been convicted; and what percentage this is of the total number of those on remand.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding reply 8 December 1988]: The readily available information held centrally relates to untried prisoners and is for the length of time since the initial reception into a prison service establishment. This may include some intervening time spent on bail.

It is estimated that of the 660 untried prisoners held in Leeds prison on 30 June 1988, 8 (1 per cent.) had been first received over a year earlier and about a further 70 (11 per cent.) had been first received between six and 12 months earlier.

Racial Harassment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the study on racial harassment produced for his Department by Brunel university.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

We are awaiting a final draft of the study report from Brunel university. We will then publish the report in the normal way.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools (Weapons Collectors' Catalogues)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ban the sending to schools of weapons collectors' catalogues; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no power to prevent books or other materials from being sent to schools. However, we look to advertisers to ensure that unsuitable material is not directed at children and young people, and that the provisons of the British code of advertising practice are followed. Schools should raise suspected breaches of the code with the Advertising Standards Authority, which administers it.

Degree Courses

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students are studying on four-year degree courses in England, Wales, Northern Ireland and Scotland at (a) universities and (b) other institutions of higher education.

Mr. Jackson: In 1987 there were 20,800 full-time and sandwich students at universities in Great Britain, and 26,500 full-time, sandwich and part-time students at polytechnics and colleges in England, on the first year of four-year degree courses. Separate figures for university students in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are not readily available. Figures for polytechnics and colleges in Wales, Scotland, and Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland respectively.

Mature Students

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many mature students are studying on (a) full-time and (b) part-time courses at (i) universities, (ii) adult education colleges and (iii) other institutions of higher education in England, Wales, Northern Ireland and Scotland.

Mr. Jackson: The available information is shown in the following table:

Mature students[1] in 1987 Thousands

	England	Institutions in Wales	Scotland	Great Britain	Northern Ireland
Home full-time
Universities (GB)	13·7	1·3	2·2	17·3	1·1

1. Mature students are defined as postgraduates aged 25 or over and first degree, sub-degree and non advanced students aged 21 or over on the first year of their course.
.. Not readily available.

Figures for non-advanced further education in Wales and Scotland and higher and further education in Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all the schools which receive pupils paid for in whole or in part under the assisted places scheme in (a) Nottinghamshire and (b) Nottingham and the number of assisted place pupils each school had in 1987-8.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested is as follows. In addition to the schools listed, Worksop college has been invited to join the APS from September 1989.

School name	[2]Number
Nottingham High school[1]	89
Nottingham High school for girls[1]	188

[1] Location: City of Nottingham.
[2] Assisted place holders 1987-88.

Teachers (Secondary Schools)

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the number of teachers employed in secondary schools in the maintained sector who teach (a) religious education and (b) mathematics, together with the total number of pupils currently on roll in those schools; and if he will make a statement about the numbers coming forward for qualification as such teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: Estimates from the 1984 secondary school staffing survey show 21,200 teachers of religious education and 40,500 teachers of mathematics in maintained secondary schools in England. A further such survey was conducted in 1988, and the results of this are expected to be available shortly.

In January 1984 there were 3,646,000 pupils on the rolls of maintained secondary schools in England, falling to 3,070,000 by January 1988.

The numbers of students commencing initial teacher training in secondary phase religious education and mathematics in England averaged 250 and 1,030 respectively for the three years 1986-88 (270 and 1,080 in England and Wales).

16 to 18-year-olds

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Official Report figures to show (a) by standard region and (b) by local educationl authority (i) the numbers and percentage of 16-year-olds in full-time education, (ii) the numbers and percentage of 18-year-olds in full-time education, (iii) the numbers and percentage of 16-year-olds on approved training schemes and (iv) the numbers and percentage of 18-year-olds on approved training schemes for each of the last available five years.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) on 28 November at column 83.

Information on training schemes is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Childcare Provision

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many (a) universities, (b) polytechnics and (c) colleges of further education have integral child care provision; what is the number of available places in each; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not held centrally.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has given to (a) the Universities Funding Council and (b) the Polytechnics Funding Council with regard to child care provision within the institutions for which they have responsibility.

Mr. Jackson: None. Child care provision is a matter for individual institutions.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the amount available for capital expenditure on schools and further education establishments in 1989-90, including the voluntary aided sector.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Local education authorities have today been informed of their allocations of prescribed expenditure for 1989-90, and of the allocations for capital spending by the governors of voluntary aided and special argeement schools in their area. The allocations are as follows:

Education capital expenditure 1989-90

Antarctic Survey

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the environmental implications of the proposed new gravel airstrip to be built by the Natural Environment Research Council's British Antarctic Survey in the British Antarctic Territory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The British Antarctic Survey has made a thorough assessment of the consequences for the environment of the proposed new airstrip. NERC has submitted a comprehensive environmental evaluation to me and to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. I am placing copies in the Libraries of both Houses today. Further copies are available from NERC. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has circulated the evaluation to the consultative parties to the Antarctic treaty in accordance with recommendation XIV-2 of the treaty. Any comments received will be considered in preparing the final text of the report and be taken into account in reaching final decisions about the construction of the airstrip. I commend this thorough report to hon. Members as further evidence of the Government's concern for the environment.

GCSE

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many constituents of the right hon. Member for Worthing have still not received their GCSE results; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The independent GCSE examining groups, which are responsible for issuing results, are not aware that any results for summer 1988 GCSE examinations are still outstanding. As in previous years, some results remain to be confirmed because they are the subject of appeals. The groups have undertaken to deal with these appeals as quickly as possible.

Meningitis

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report, in tabular form, details of all research being carried out into meningitis with support from public funds, showing the name of the research worker, the title and duration of each project, the establishment at which it is being conducted, and the amount of research grant being provided.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 19 December 1988]: Directly relevant research being supported by the MRC is set out in the table. Total expenditure on the projects under way in 1987-88 was £216,000; expenditure in 1988-89 will be at a higher level, but cannot be accurately estimated at this stage. The Department of Health is supporting a case study of meningococcal disease in eight west country health districts, co-ordinated by Dr. R. Stanwell-Smith, Bristol and Weston health authority. The amount of the grant is £38,100 and the duration, May 1988 to March 1990. Some support for research on meningitis is also provided through UGC block grants to universities.

Students

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total number of home full-time and sandwich students in higher education in each year since 1979; what has been the total full-time equivalent number of part-time students in higher education in each year since 1979; and what has been the total number of home full-time entrants to universities in each year since 1979.

Mr. Jackson [pursuant to his answer 28 November 1988]: I regret that figures for full-time and sandwich students were in error and included non-United Kingdom-domiciled students. The corrected answer, which also includes final figures for part-time students in 1987, is therefore as follows:

ENERGY

Chapelcross and Calderhall

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy pursuant to his answer of 8 December, what the appropriate share of decommissioning the nuclear power plants at Chapelcross and Calderhall will cost public funds over the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The operator of the nuclear power plants at Chapelcross and Calder Hall does not expect them to be taken out of service over the next five years, so no contributions from public funds to the costs of decommissioning these facilities are expected to be made over that time.

Subsidence (Compensation)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to receive British Coal's annual report on the administration of the subsidence compensation scheme referred to in the Government's White Paper in response to the Waddilove report.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have now received this report from British Coal and have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses today.

WALES

Physically Handicapped People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's response to the joint submission made in July by the Spastic Society and the Wales Council for the Disabled, on the need for an all-Wales physical handicap strategy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Our officials are still considering the issues raised by the discussion document and will be consulting these organisations and other relevant groups in due course.

Welsh National Opera

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received (a) from local authorities in Gwynedd and (b) from others, seeking Welsh Office support for the establishment of an arts centre at Llandudno to provide a north Wales base for Welsh National Opera; and what is his response on this matter.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has received representations from Aberconwy borough council and Gwynedd county council and has also received 41 letters in support of the scheme since the beginning of the year.

Aberconwy borough council has been told that, whilst we see the attractions of the project and accept that Llandudno would be a suitable location for it, we have reservations about the financial aspect of the scheme as presented, not least the request that central Government should fund most of the cost.

The council has been invited to consider submitting revised proposals which would overcome these reservations.

School Governors

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to which local education authorities in Wales, in organising the election of school governors (a) afforded parents the opportunity to (i) post in nomination forms and (ii) vote by post and (b) told parents in writing of their rights to submit nominations or ballot papers by post, with an indication of the address to which they were to be posted and adequate time for this to take place; and if he will undertake a survey of the conduct of these elections in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The detailed information requested is not collected centrally.

Officials in the Department have been monitoring the process of reconstitution of school governing bodies by the local education authorities, and are satisfied that the majority of school governor elections have been conducted in accordance with the guidance which was issued on 27 July 1987 in Welsh Office Circular 12/87—"Education (No. 2) Act 1986: Further Guidance".

We have at present no plans to undertake a survey of the conduct of school governor elections in Wales.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1988 reported by the National Museum of Wales, includings its outstations, with the percentage change on the attendance figures for 1987.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information will not be available until January when I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman.

Current Affairs Programmes (Presenters)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which presenters of current affairs programmes in Wales have been employed or commissioned to undertake freelance work by the Welsh Office or the Welsh Development Agency in the last two years; and on how many occasions.

Mr. Peter Walker: In the last two years, the Welsh Office has commissioned Mr. Vincent Kane to promote exporting to industrialists on two occasions. In the same period, the Welsh Development Agency employed Mr. John Humphrys to appear in a video to promote the development of financial services.

Elderly People

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he plans to issue circulars by local authorities on planning guidelines to meet the needs of an increasingly elderly population in Wales.

Mr. Grist: There are no plans at present to issue specific guidance on these matters.

Housing

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he has any plans to issue planning guidance in the form of circulars to local authorities on facilitating the provision of starter homes for young couples especially in rural areas;

(2) if he has any plans to issue planning guidance in the form of circulars to local authorities to facilitate the provision of housing for disabled persons;

(3) if he has any plans to issue planning guidance in the form of circulars to local authorities to facilitate the provision of housing for single people.

Mr. Grist: There are no plans at present to issue specific guidance on these matters.

Eggs

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of human salmonella infections were reported in Wales in each of the last three years; and how many were directly attributed to fresh hens' eggs.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of cases of salmonellosis in Wales is not available, but data on the number of reports of salmonellosis in Wales are given in the following table. These data include both cases and excretors. Information on how many of these reports were directly attributed to fresh hens' eggs is not available. However, it is known that, in 1988 to the end of October, there were in Wales five outbreaks of salmonellosis involving 44 people in which the likely source of infection was eggs:

Laboratory Reports of Salmonellosis from Wales to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre

Year	Total Reports

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what investigations have been carried out by the public health laboratory service into outbreaks of salmonella enteriditis in Wales; how many hen eggs were sampled; and what were the conclusions.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 20 December 1988]: The public health laboratory service has investigated three outbreaks of salmonella enteritidis phage type 4 in Wales during 1988. On each occasion foods containing shell eggs from hens were implicated as the vehicle of infection. In the one case where the source of supply could be identified 18 eggs were sampled, but the organism was not isolated.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the levels of rent arrears for each local authority for each month in 1987 and for each month to date in 1988.

Mr. Grist: Data relating to rent arrears are held centrally only on an annual basis. The information provided on the following table relates to the provisional outturn for 1987-88. It is based on each local authority's final collection period for that year.

Primary Health Care

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when discussions will begin with professional bodies and others on the primary health care initiative announced by him in the programme for the valleys.

Mr. Peter Walker: A consultation letter is to issue to all those with an interest before the recess, and I shall place the text in the Library of the House. The scheme will blend practical support for primary health care practitioners with advanced professional training initially for doctors and nurses together. It will aim to ensure that patients will be able to obtain a still wider and better managed range of services, well adapted to their needs and supportive of health promotion more generally. It will present a novel and significant opportunity for constructive development in practice team working, and in service partnership for patients. Subject to parliamentary approval I intend that just under £500,000 be made available for full year provision in support of the scheme. I hope that all of those involved will lend their efforts to help in realising the scheme's potential.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department issues any guidelines to local education authorities in Wales who are converting from sixth forms to tertiary colleges, concerning the need to have a tertiary facility through the Welsh language for pupils who would otherwise have progressed to sixth form study through the medium of Welsh.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 20 December]: Welsh office Circular 20/88 "Educational Quality in Wales: The Response to Falling School Rolls", issued in June 1988, advised local education authorities to consider the alternative methods of provision, including tertiary colleges, when considering educational provision for 16-19 year olds. The circular advised that rationalisation proposals should take account of the place of Welsh in the curriculum to ensure continuity in, the learning of the language, both as a subject and as a medium of learning.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will arrange for the document entitled "You and the Community Charge", published by the Department of the Environment, to be available through the medium of the Welsh language in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my letter to him of 16 December which enclosed copies, both in English and in Welsh, of the brief guide to the community charge that has been available from the Welsh Office since last August. The publication "You and the Community Charge" refers only to England.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each district (a) the number of local housing authority tenants who receive housing benefit and (b) the number of housing association tenants who receive housing benefit.

Mr. Grist: The number of local housing authority tenants who were in receipt of housing benefit during 1987-88 is given in the table.

Information on the number of housing association tenants in each local authority district who receive housing benefit is not available.

House Purchase

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will identify the district councils which are eligible to apply for money available to local authorities in rural areas with a high concentration of second homes to purchase homes for sale or rent to local people; and whether this money will be by way of grant or loan.

Mr. Grist: All district authorities in rural areas with a high proportion of second homes are invited to apply for the £1 million extra funding available in 1989-90. The money will be made available by way of additional capital allocation and may be used to acquire property for rent or re-sale.

School Doctors and Dentists (Language)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance is given by his Department to health authorities in Wales concerning the need to ensure whenever possible that school doctors and dentists are capable of conversing with primary school children in their first language.

Mr. Grist: Welsh Office Health Circular WHSC (IS) 117, a copy of which is available in the Library, recognises the importance of individuals being able to converse in their mother tongue during contract with the Health Service, and asks authorities to offer appropriate services wherever this would be reasonable and practicable.

STC (Redundancies)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what account the Welsh Development Agency took, when awarding grants to STC and other companies which involved closure of a site elsewhere, of the consequent redundancies.

Mr. Peter Walker: Regional grant schemes in Wales are administered by the Welsh Office. Regional selective assistance is not normally made available to projects which involve the transfer of jobs from one part of Great Britain to another with no net increase in employment. Where a relocation project involves some net increase in employment in an assisted areas location, the transferred jobs are normally discounted for the purposes of assessing any RSA grant for which the project may be eligible.

Health and Personal Social Services

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has reached a decision about the allocation of resources for health and personal social services in Wales in 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Walker: Subject to parliamentary approval, I propose to allocate £1,315 million in 1989-90 to health and personal social services in Wales. This represents a cash increase of £142 million over 1988-89 plans, and an increase of nearly £93 million over planned provision for 1989-90. The Health Service will have further additional spending power of nearly £19 million as a result of reduced superannuation contributions.

My proposals include £953 million for the hospital and community health services, an increase of £103 million over provision in 1988-90. I will announce allocations to individual health authorities as soon as possible. In addition to their allocations, health authorities will retain the benefit of cash released through cost improvement programmes, income from charges for the treatment of private patients and from income generation schemes, and receipts from the sale of surplus land and buildings.

I am proposing a special allocation of over £6 million in support of developments under my programme for the valleys. My proposals will also make possible the further development of modern patterns of service for those with mental handicaps, elderly people and those suffering from mental illness; of breast and cervical cancer screening services; measures against AIDS; and the promotion of a healthy lifestyle.

Valleys Programme

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce allocations to district health authorities in 1989-90 announced by him in the programme for the valleys.

Mr. Peter Walker: District health authorities have today been informed that the following allocations are to be made under the programme for the valleys for projects commencing in 1989-90 and are shown in the following table.

Funding under the programme will enable health authorities significantly to advance the implementation of these schemes. All the applications made by health authorities for funding in 1989-90 have been met. In some instances the level of funding allocated under the programme has been greater than 50 per cent. of the anticipated expenditure in the year in order that the authority's contribution can be met from within the limits of its annual capital allocation. The level of funding in such cases will be balanced in any future tranches of programme allocations. Funding of individual schemes is subject to the outcome of any public consultation which may be appropriate.

These decisions represent a major investment in health care in deprived areas by my Department in partnership with the health authorities. It should yield a significant improvement in the environment and quality of health services offered to local people.

Consideration is also being given to a proposal for an innovative research project into improvements in domiciliary antenatal care which would be conducted in Mid Glamorgan and Gwent. A decision on the extent of any funding from the programme to this initiative will be taken in the light of discussions with the relevant health authorities and the proposers.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Transitional Benefits

71. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will make a statement on the way in which transitional benefits payment is working.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The transitional payments unit is working very well and became fully operational on 14 July when the first payments were issued. Up to 13 December the unit had received 131,438 written inquiries, 71,088 telephone inquiries and 396,776 applications for housing benefit transitional payments. A total of 393,700 inquiry forms, requesting housing benefit details, have been issued to local authorities of which 330,414 have been returned. As soon as these inquiry forms are returned by authorities the unit is processing applications and so far 145,687 cases are receiving payments. The number of cases which have been found to be ineligible is 161,473. The unit has also processed 342 income support transitional payment cases of which 165 have resulted in payments being made.

Income Support

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the total weekly income support for a married man with children aged four and six years if his income is (a) £50 per week, (b) £130 per week and (c) £160 per week.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is set out in the table. It is for families whose head is in full-time work and not eligible for income support.

The results are hypothetical, particularly as the family is assumed to pay average local authority housing charges. This masks the wide variety of rent and domestic rates that local authority tenants actually pay and need not reflect families' circumstances and their housing arrangements in these parts of the income distribution.

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of families with children in Great Britain are expected to be (a) entitled to and (b claiming income support or family credit in 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Legal entitlement to an income-related benefit can be established only when an individual puts in a claim. Reliable estimates of the number of people who may be eligible for one of the income-related benefits but who do not submit a claim are available only on an historical survey basis. For the latest available estimates I refer the hon. Member to pages 272-273 of Cm. 288—the 1988 Public Expenditure White Paper. Later estimates, for 1985, will become available in the new year. Estimates published in October 1987 suggested that around 1¼ million families with children, or just over one-fifth of the total in Great Britain, might claim income support or family credit in April 1988. Information providing estimates for 1989-90 will become available when the 1989 Public Expenditure White Paper is published.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently claiming income support in the borough of Blyth Valley.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The borough of Blyth Valley is served by the local office at Blyth but the boundaries are not conterminous. The number of people claiming income support at Blyth local office on 31 August 1988, the latest information available, was 7,785. This figure is provisional and subject to amendment.

Tax Allowances and Benefits

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his estimate of the number of adults and children who would become eligible for benefit if (i) the annual personal allowance for income tax, (ii) the one-parent benefit, (iii) the child dependency addition and (iv) both (i) and (ii), were terminated; and how many adults and children would fall into the poverty and employment traps;

(2) what is his estimate of the number of adults and children in households which would become eligible for benefit if child benefit was to be terminated.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Reliable estimates of the eligible population for the main income-related benefits, and of those who might be eligible for them as a result of major policy changes to child benefit, can be obtained only through historical survey data giving firm details of family size and composition, numbers of earners in the family, total incomes and employment status. Presently available sample data pre-date the social security reform introduced in April 1988. Eligible populations based on this information are therefore more than usually uncertain.

There is no precise definition of the "poverty trap". Receipt of income-related benefits raises marginal deductions from income. In general, and with the exception of crossing lower rate national insurance contribution thresholds, no one should now face deduction rates of 100 per cent. or more, as could occur under the previous system.

No precise numerical definition of the unemployment trap exists, but the effect of the changes specified in the question on the numbers whose incomes are similar when in and out of work are likely to be small.

Family Credit

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures giving expenditure on family credit and housing benefit paid to people above and below retirement age who are not in receipt of income support and the revenue received from the same people through income tax, national insurance contributions and local authority rates.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Expenditure on family credit is running at the sorts of levels expected in Cm. 288—the 1988 public expenditure White Paper. Estimates of expenditure on reformed housing benefit will become available when the 1989 public expenditure White Paper is published. Reliable estimates of the kind specified in the question will be possible only when historical survey data on the numbers in receipt of the reformed income related benefits, along with corresponding information on incomes, earnings and local authority rates payments, are available. Even then, it is likely that the kind of information mentioned in the question could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Working Mothers

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the average increase in net weekly spending power of a working woman with two children of seven and 11 years for each extra £1 she earns if she increases her pay from (a) £40 to £50, (b) £50 to £60, (c) £60 to £70, (d) £70 to £80, (e) £80 to £90, (f) £90 to £100, (g) £100 to £110 and (h) £110 to £120 for both a married woman and a one-parent family.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible to provide the precise information requested for a married woman because this will depend on the status and the total income of the tax unit as a whole.

For a lone parent the information is as follows:

Lone Parent, Two Children (Aged 7 and 11)

Nurses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received from nursing organisations regarding changes in the social security payments scheme which affect their members; if he will list those organisations submitting representations; and what steps he proposes to take to remedy any difficulties;

(2) whether he has received any representations from the college of nursing dialysis and the transport nursing forum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Soon after the introduction of the income support scheme, we received a letter from one hon. Member which enclosed correspondence from the royal college of nursing dialysis and transplant nursing forum. We have no plans to change the premium structure for dialysis patients at the present time.

Supplementary Benefit/Income Support

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, if he will publish a table showing with regard to the payment of supplementary benefit or income support to people in independent residential care and nursing homes and for each year since 1979 including an estimate for the current year (a) the expenditure in current and constant prices, (b) the number of claimants, (c) the average payment in current and constant prices, (d) the proportion of residents in receipt of supplementary benefit/income support and (e) the ceiling payments for care support under supplementary benefit/income support at both current prices and constant prices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd The information requested is in the tables. All figures in table 1 are estimates. Information on the proportion of residents receiving supplementary benefit/income support is not yet available beyond February 1986. Table 2 provides information from April 1985 when the current system of national limits was introduced.

Aged Persons' Homes

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the numbers of people who have been removed from private aged persons' homes when their fees can no longer be met from income support payments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that such information is not available.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing how much was spent on standard housing benefit for each year between 1982-83 and 1987-88 in 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is given in the table.

Standard housing benefit expenditure at 1987-88 prices

	£ million
1982-83	1,395
1983-84	1,666
1984-85	1,680
1985-86	1,754
1986-87	1,841
1987-88	1,829

Note:
The housing benefit scheme for standard cases did not begin until 1983-84. The information for 1982-83 is for rent and rate rebate and rent allowance schemes operated by the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of claimants of housing benefit supplement in the week preceeding 4 April in each local authority area, and the number of claimants of housing benefit supplement for the subsequent week on a similar basis.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many new claims for housing benefit supplement were received at (a) the Pontefract and (b) the Castleford office from 1 November 1987 to 30 August 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The only information available is that obtained from the housing benefit subsidy claims submitted by local authorities. It is not available for individual local offices. This information shows the number of housing benefit supplement cases in payment at 31 March in each year. The available returns for the years 1986-87 and 1987-88 have been placed in the Library. Some figures for 1987-88 are provisional.

As part of our reform of social security, housing benefit supplement ceased to be paid on 1 or 4 April 1988. There will, therefore, be no cases in payment after these dates.

Castleford and Pontefract local offices deal with Wakefield metropolitan borough council. The Pontefract local office also deals with Selby district council. Both local authorities however deal with other local offices as well.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the saving in a full year of his decision to lower to 55 the age at which the abatement of unemployment benefit to occupational pensioners comes into force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We estimate the saving to be about £65 million in a full year.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the wider implications for women who are entitled to back-payment of the invalid care allowance in consequence of the award of benefit by a Social Security commissioner in the case of Lucy Mabel Hood of Horsham.

Mr. Scott: As I said in my aswer to the right hon. Member on 9 December at column 385 we are considering carefully the wider implications of the commissioner's decision.

Social Fund

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of applications for social fund loans were successful in (a) Pontefract and (b) Castleford offices up to the last available date that figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the numbers, by month of applications processed for social fund loans together with the number and value of awards made is available in the Library.

Single Payments

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals to the Social Security appeal tribunals in Scotland were raised against refusal of single payments; how many of such appeals were successful; and what proportion the number which were successful is to the total number, showing in his answer the figures for each of the last 10 years prior to the abolition of single payments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table gives the information required. Figures for the years 1978 and 1979 relate to discretionary payments called exceptional needs payments. Figures from 1980 are for single payments payable under the single payments regulations introduced in that year.

Year	Total appeals (Scotland)	Number successful	Percentage successful
1978	2,553	659	25·8
1979	2,127	660	31·0
1980	3,056	979	32·0
1981	3,889	961	24·7
1982	4,587	893	19·5
1983	5,545	1,181	21·3
1984	6,988	2,089	29·9
1985	9,734	3,073	31·6
1986	13,427	3,828	28·5
1987	22,822	6,368	27·9

Benefits (Appeals)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in the Official Report the average length of time which elapses between the date of refusal of a social security benefit and the determination of an appeal against such refusal taken to the Social Security appeal tribunal in Scotland.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest administrative statistics on social security appeal tribunals for Scotland relate to appeals heard in the three months to March 1988, when the average time between lodgement of the appeal and the hearing was 25·9 weeks.

Child Benefit

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people receive child benefit; and how many of these are currently paying income tax.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In Great Britain around 6·7 million families receive child benefit and around 5·2 million families with children pay income tax.

Child Tax Allowance

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the combined value of child tax allowance after clawback and family allowance or child benefit for families at (a) half average earnings, (b) average earnings, (c) twice average earnings and (d) five times average earnings in the years 1958, 1965, 1975, 1985 and the latest date available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

Child support (1) for families with two children aged 11 or under, at April 1988 (2) values.

Families on:	April 1958 £	April 1965 £	April 1975 £	Nov. 1985 £	April 1988 £
½ average earnings	3·52	4·00	12·48	15·44	14·50
average earnings	11·50	13·58	12·48	15·44	14·50
2 × average earnings	16·31	15·01	12·48	15·44	14·50
5 × average earnings	16·31	15·01	12·48	15·44	14·50

(1) The combined value of child tax allowance after clawback, and Family Allowance/Child Benefit.
(2) Based on the movement in the General Index of Retail Prices at April 1988.

Lower Paid Families (Tax Rates)

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures for the numbers of lower paid families with and without children, whose marginal tax rates including benefit withdrawal will be (a) 90 to 100 per cent., (b) 80 to 90 per cent., (c) 70 to 80 per cent., (d) 60 to 70 per cent., (e) 50 to 60 per cent., (f) 40 to 50 per cent., assuming that in 1989-90 personal tax allowances are raised in line with inflation and the basic rate of tax is maintained at 25 per cent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 14 December at column 589.

Housing Benefit (War Widows)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those local authorities who do not use their discretion under secton 28(6)(a) of the Social Security Act 1986 to disregard war widows's pensions in assessing housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the informaton is not available.

Staff Reductions

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the anticipated reductions in his Department's staff numbers by local offices in Scotland due to implementation of new technology and operational strategy.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The staffing reductions flowing from the implementation of operational strategy in local offices in Scotland are currently expected to be, 1,193 posts between 1 April 1989 and 31 March 1992. Local office by office savings are not available centrally.

Official Publications

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 12 December to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East, Official Report, column 454, whether his Department has any policy regarding the use of statements which may be the subject of political debate or controversy in its official publications.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department's policy is to use objective and factual statements in all official publications.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Further Education

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) whether the salaries paid to lecturers in further education colleges in Northern Ireland contain an element in respect of unsocial working hours;

(2) whether lecturers undertaking evening work receive any additional allowance in salary.

Dr. Mawhinney: The remuneration of lecturers is laid down in the nationally agreed conditions of service. Salaries of full-time lecturers are paid in respect of their contracted hours. Any additional teaching hours undertaken, including evening work, are paid at the hourly rate appropriate to the level of the course.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidance is given by the Department of Education, Northern Ireland to principals of colleges or staff responsible for timetabling in colleges regarding the desirability of sharing evening classes among staff in each department rather than allocating evening classes to the same member of staff annually.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. This is a matter for college management to determine.

Ulster museum

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1988 reported by the Ulster museum, including its outstations, with the percentage change on the attendance figures for 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is estimated that about 320,100 people will have visited the Ulster museum and the Armagh County museum in 1988, an increase of almost 20 per cent. on the attendance figure for 1987.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is: (a) the total amount of money allocated to the National Health Service in Northern Ireland for nurses' pay and (b) the amount allocated to each health board for nurses' pay in each of the years 1984 to 1988.

Mr. Needham: Allocations are made to boards to enable them to deliver the full range of health and personal social services. The setting of budgets within allocations is a matter for boards; provision for nurses pay is not separately identified within the allocations. However, total expenditure on nurses' pay in 1987-88 was £185 million.

Nurses (Grading)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will identify the total amount of additional money allocated to Northern Ireland on the basis of the Government's announcement of extra funding for the clinical regrading exercise.

Mr. Needham: Northern Ireland's share of the extra funding for the clinical regrading exercise was £5·4 million. This was in addition to the initial allocation of £18·5 million made following the review body annquncement.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the reasons for delays in the issuing of appeal results to nurses in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: No formal appeals have been heard in Northern Ireland. When requested, the grades of some nurses are being reviewed informally and the outcomes of these reviews are being notified to nurses as quickly as possible.

Mr. Jim Marshall To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total amount of money allocated to the National Health Service in Northern Ireland for the implementation of clinical regrading.

Mr. Needham: The total provision for nurses pay has been increased by £32·2 million in the current year compared with 1987-88.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to allow individual nurses in Northern Ireland an opportunity to set down the work they do as part of the clinical grading review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The clinical grading exercise in Northern Ireland was carried out by line managers and when the job content of a nurse's post was not known nurses were asked to provide details of the work they did. Those nurses who are dissatisfied with the outcome of the grading exercise may ask for their grading to be reviewed and at this stage they have the opportunity to submit full details of the work they do.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money (a) in cash figures and (b) as percentages of nursing budgets is estimated as necessary by the initial National Health Service clinical grading exercise for Northern Ireland as a whole and for each of the four health boards.

Mr. Needham: The initial provision for the clinical grading exercise based on the recommendations of the review body was for an average overall increase in costs, outside London, of 14·5 per cent. The amounts for each board were:

	£ million
Northern	4·2
Southern	4·1
Eastern	13·6
Western	4·2

The total for Northern Ireland including the national board for nursing, midwifery and health visiting is £26·8 million.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why the initial National Health Service grading exercise has now been imposed on nurses in Northern Ireland without prior consultation with either the nurses concerned or their staff organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The clinical grading criteria, recommended by the nurses pay review body and accepted in full by the Government, have been applied to nurses in Northern Ireland following full consultation and with the agreement of the staff representatives on staff side of the Northern Ireland staffs joint council for nurses and midwives.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to ensure that the imposition of grades on nurses in Northern Ireland complies with the requirements of the Equal Pay Act (NI) 1970, the Sex Discrimination Order (NI) 1976 and the Fair Employment Act (NI) 1976; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The implementation of the clinical grading structure in Northern Ireland is a matter for health and social services boards as employing authorities. I am satisfied that boards have had due regard to existing legislation in carrying out this task.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the amount of money set aside for successful grading appeals (a) within the total allocation for the Health Service in Northern Ireland and (b) within each of the health board's allocations.

Mr. Needham: The funds being allocated to area boards etc—which include £32·2 million as the assessed cost of the clinical grading review—are intended to cover all pay costs arising in the current financial year, including any costs arising from successful appeals.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of people receiving invalidity benefit by convenient area unit in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At 1 December 1988 the number of people receiving invalidity benefit in Northern Ireland was 46,898. The benefit is administered centrally and a breakdown of this figure by local area within Northern Ireland is not available.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of people receiving retirement pensions by convenient area unit in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At 13 December 1988 the number of people receiving retirement pension in Northern Ireland was 212,373. The benefit is administered centrally and a breakdown of this figure by local area within Northern Ireland is not available.

Expenditure

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing his Department's expenditure headings with the amount spent in each year from 1979 to the current date.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1988]: Information is only available in a consistent format for the years 1982-83 to 1988-89 and can be found in Cm 288-II table 18.1. The figures for the years 1979-80 to 1981-82 are not strictly comparable with those for the more recent years. Figures for 1981-82 are shown in Cm 56-II table 3.18, for 1980-81 in Cm 9702-II table 3·18, and for 1979-80 in Cm 9428-II table 3.17. It should be noted, however, that a major restructuring of the programmes of Northern Ireland Departments took place prior to the 1987 public expenditure White Paper and as a result it is not possible to provide meaningful information for the individual programmes of Northern Ireland Departments prior to 1981-82. In addition, no figures are available for national agriculture and fishery support prior to 1981-82 and therefore the totals for 1979-80 and 1980-81 for Northern Ireland Departments, Northern Ireland block and Northern Ireland programme exclude this element.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) resources and (b) guidelines he has made available to (i) hospital authorities and (ii) community care agencies for the treatment of AIDS sufferers.

Mr. Mellor: In 1986-87 the Government made available additional central funding of £2·5 million and in 1987-88 £25·1 million as a contribution towards the additional costs of providing treatment and care for people infected with HIV and with AIDS. This year we have allocated over £58 million to help develop preventive, counselling and diagnostic services and as a further contribution towards the costs of care and treatment in hospitals and in the community for people with AIDS; £2 million of this has been made available to the social services departments of inner London boroughs, where the great majority of people with HIV infection and AIDS are living.

We have announced that, for 1989-90, a total of almost £130 million will be available towards the costs of HIV-related prevention, care and treatment.

We have issued policy aims and service objectives for HIV-related services in health circulars setting out planning guidelines for the NHS. These were HC(86) 2, issued in January 1986, HC(87) 7, issued in March 1987 and HC(88) 43, issued in July 1988.

A list of the guidelines issued by the Government is as follows.

AIDS—General Information for Doctors. (Booklet 1, (CMO(85)7)). Issued by Department of Health and Social Security—May 1985.

Information For Doctors Concerning The Introduction of the HTLV III Antibody Test. (Booklet 2) (CMO(85)12)). Issued by Department of Health and Social Security—October 1985.

Guidance For Surgeons, Anaethetists, Dentists and their Teams in Dealing with Patients Infected with HTLV III. (Booklet 3, (CMO(86)7)). Issued by Department of Health and Social Security—April 1986.

Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, (AIDS) and Artificial Insemination—Guidance for Doctors and A.I. Clinics. (Booklet 4, (CMO(86)12)). Issued by Department of Health and Social Security—July 1986.

Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens—LAV/HTLV III—The Causitive Agent of AIDS and Related Conditions. Health Departments and Health and Safety Executive—June 1986.

Information and Guidance on AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) for Local Authority Staff (LASSL(86)8). Issued by Department of Health and Social Security—July 1986.

AIDS—The Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome and HIV: The AIDS Virus. (CMO(86)18). Issued by Department of Health and Social Security—December 1986.

Children at School and Problems Related to AIDS. (CMO(86)10). Issued by Department of Health and Social Security—June 1986.

AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) And Employment—(Booklet). Issued by Department of Employment and Health and Safety Executive—1986.

Children at School and Problems Related to AIDS (Booklet). Issued by Department of Education and Science and Welsh Office—March 1986.

AIDS—Some Questions and Answers. For Teachers, Lecturers and Youth Workers (Booklet). Issued by Department of Education and Science 1987.

AIDS: HIV Infected Health Care Workers (ISBN 011 3211406). Issued by Department of Health and Social Security—March 1988.

Cervical Smears

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North, Offical Report, 8 December, columns 336-37, what is the current average waiting period in north Staffordshire for cervical smears.

Mr. Mellor: The current average period from receipt by north Staffordshire's laboratory of a routine cervical smear to a report being sent to the doctor who submitted the smear is four to five weeks. I understand that women in north Staffordshire have no difficulty in obtaining a cervical smear as part of the district's screening programme, in line with our guidance that women aged 20-64 should be tested at least every five years.

Residential Homes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report the figures for the past five year period of those in England and Wales who have applied for licences to run residential homes, shown broken down by regional health authority areas in which the homes were situated.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold this information centrally.

Salmonella (Eggs)

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many salmonella infected eggs were discovered during routine testing at (a) the Government's research station at Colindale and (b) other public or private testing establishments during the past two years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) and my hon. Friend for Bromsgrove (Sir H. Miller) on 20 December.

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of salmonella poisoning directly attributable to eggs have led to deaths in each of the past five years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The table shows the number of cases of bacteraemia (blood poisoning) due to salmonella reported by laboratories to the public health laboratory service.

Year	Total Salmonella Bacteraemia		S. enteritidis Bacteraemia		S. enteritidis PT4 Bacteraemia
	Cases	Deaths[1]	Cases	Deaths[1]	Cases	Deaths[1]
1984	203	33	17	3	1	—
1985	151	30	30	9	9	3
1986	192	21	43	5	19	4
1987	226	35	61	15	26	9
1988 to October	237	48	120	26	87	23

[1] Deaths known to have occurred among these cases.

There is no direct evidence to link these deaths with the consumption of eggs but salmonella enteritidis phage type 4 (PT4) is associated almost exclusively with chicken and eggs and we must assume that some of the deaths in the final column will have been associated with eggs.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence his Department has of infection of hens' eggs by transmission of salmonella species in the oviduct; and what species are involved.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith) on 16 December at column 766.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of human gastroenteritis caused by species of salmonella were reported in the last three years; what species were involved; and how many were directly attributed to fresh hens' eggs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information available is as follows:

Salmonella in humans
England and Wales

Year	Serotype Typhimurium	Serotype Enteritidis	Other serotypes	Total
1986	7,094	4,771	5,111	16,976
1987	7,660	6,858	6,014	20,532
1988[1]	5,488	13,004	4,546	23,038

It is not possible to attribute all cases to a specific food vehicle but we know that, to the end of October 1988 there were 46 reported outbreaks involving over 1,000 people in which the likely source of infection was eggs.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many persons, as a result of salmonella in eggs, have been (a) admitted to hospital, (b) classified as seriously ill and (c) have died, in 1988 and each of the previous 10 years; and how many patients are currently (i) in hospital and (ii) seriously ill as a result of salmonella poisoning by eggs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 19 December 1988]: We cannot separately identify, from data collected centrally, the information requested on hospital admissions and the numbers of seriously ill.

Some information is available on the numbers of cases and deaths from salmonellosis bacteraemias reported by laboratories to the Public Health Laboratory Service as follows:

Reports of salmonellosis bacteraemias (England and Wales)

	Total salmonella bacteraemias[1]		S. enteritidis bacteraemias
	Cases	Deaths[2]	Cases	(PT4)	Deaths	(PT4)[2]
1983	201	30	14	(4)	5	(2)
1984	203	33	17	(1)	3	(—)
1985	151	30	30	(9)	5	(3)
1986	192	21	43	(19)	5	(4)
1987	226	35	61	(26)	15	(9)
1988[3]	237	48	120	(87)	26	(23)

[2] Deaths known to have occurred among these cases.
[3] To end October.

We do not have earlier information readily available.

There is no direct evidence to link these deaths with the consumption of eggs, but salmonella enteritidis phage type 4(PT4) is associated almost exclusively with chicken and eggs and we must assume that some of the deaths shown in the final column will have been associated with eggs.

Salmonella

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the reported outbreaks of salmonella poisoning over the last eight years were in (a) the home, (b) hospitals and (c) catering establishments; and what was the relationship of each of these outbreaks to refrigeration.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 16 December 1988]: Between 1980 and 1985 there were 2,187 reported outbreaks of salmonella food poisoning concerning private houses; 125 concerning hospitals and 303 concerning catering establishments—restaurants and receptions. Figures for 1986 and 1987 are not yet available in verified form. We have no information on the relationship of refrigeration to these outbreaks.

Transplants

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the major countries where organ transplant surgery is practised, giving a summary of the legal provisions which apply to the donation of organs in each country.

Mr. Freeman: We do not collect comprehensive information on the legal provisions which apply to organ donation in other countries. The hon. Member may, however, wish to consult a report published in 1987 by the Council of Europe, copies of which are in the Library. The report is entitled "Organ Transplantation: current legislation in Council of Europe member states and Finland, and results of European co-operation" (reference MSN-3-4).

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the availability of (a) hearts, (b) livers, (c) pancreases, (d) kidneys, (e) lungs and (f) eyes for transplant surgery;

(2) how many patients are waiting for transplant operations of (a) heart, (b) liver, (c) pancreas, (d) kidney, (e) lung and (f) cornea, respectively; and what is the maximum and minimum waiting time for such operations;

(3) if he will make a statement on the shortfall between organs available for transplant and the need for such organs; and if he will indicate how many potential recipients are likely to die because donor organs are not available, over the most convenient period.

Mr. Freeman: The number of organs available for transplant fluctuates significantly from time to time. The balance between the need for organs and the number available also varies, depending on such factors as whether a suitable match between recipient and donor can be found. In general terms, however, the shortage of cadaveric organs is most acute in the case of kidneys.

United Kingdom waiting lists, as notified to the United Kingdom transplant service (UKTS) on 25 November 1988 were:

	Number
Heart or heart/lung	396

Cornea	581

Transplants of pancreases or lungs are rare, except when combined with the transplant of another organ. Only a proportion of patients waiting for corneal transplants are registered with UKTS; the waiting list does not therefore reflect the full national demand. Figures are not readily available on maximum and minimum waiting times.

The main purpose of kidney transplantation is not to save life but to improve its quality for those who would otherwise rely on dialysis. Heart and liver patients may on occasions die while waiting for a suitably matched organ but, because the availability of organs is inpredictable and the condition of individual patients awaiting transplantation will vary, no useful estimate can be made of the numbers likely to be involved in the future.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will quantify the benefits of transplant surgery in terms of (a) additional years lived (b) quality of life for recipients and (c) savings to the National Health Service on the treatment of continuing illness, for each of (a) heart, (b) liver, (c) pancreas, (d) kidney, (e) lung and (f) cornea.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that we do not have available information in the form requested. Some information on heart transplants is given in "Costs and Benefits of the Heart Transplant Programmes at Harefield and Papworth Hospitals" (DHSS research report No. 12, 1985) which is available in the Library. Graft survival has steadily improved since this study was carried out.

For information on the survival of kidney transplants, I refer the hon. Member to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Sir M. McNair-Wilson) on 19 December. An article by Wood, Mallick and Wing published in the British Medical Journal on 6 June 1987 (Volume 294) suggested that each successful kidney transplant saved the National Health Service £30,000 compared with the cost of renal dialysis.

We are not aware of similar studies of the costs and benefits of other forms of transplantation.

Children (Cleveland)

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to (a) how many families in total were involved in the events in Cleveland reported on by Justice Butler-Sloss, (b) how many children were taken into care during the period examined and (c) how many of those children are still in care.

Mr. Mellor: I regret that we do not hold the information requested centrally. My hon. Friend may like to contact Cleveland county council.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will be in a position to announce regional allocation figures for the recent increases in National Health Service expenditure.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Spending in the hospital and community health service in England will increase by £1·1 billion in 1989-90, with over £1 billion going to regional health authorities as part of their initial allocations. This will be supplemented by some £175 million from new cost-improvement schemes and higher income generation receipts.

Regional health authorities' main allocations will increase in 1989-90 by an average of 2·7 per cent. in real terms. This substantial increase will be distributed so that all regions benefit to the largest possible extent. No region will receive less than 7·7 per cent., or 2·5 per cent. in real terms, an increase well above the figures authorities have so far been using in planning next year's service growth. Some regions, especially those with growing populations, will get slightly more because otherwise they would move away from their resource allocation working party target.

In addition to the increase in main allocations an extra £68 million will be provided for the fight against AIDS, bringing the total central provision to £130 million. As a result we will not only continue to underpin the cost of treatment and care but will give a major boost to work on prevention.

A total of £7·8 million will be provided separately for the costs of the new measles, mumps and rubella vaccine following the successful introductory campaign. The waiting list fund will go into its third year in 1989-90, and a further £30 million has been set aside for distribution to regional health authorities. A sum of £49 million will be provided for expenditure on specialised high technology services provided from a few national centres (supra-regional services). The breast cancer screening programme will be supported with an additional £11 million.

In addition, main capital allocations will increase by £85 million to £730 million. The increase will be distributed using the RAWP formula. Land sales are forecast to raise £290 million. Together these sums will more than sustain the hospital building and improvement programme which already includes over 500 schemes each costing over £1 million at various stages of planning, design and construction.

Details of the increases in authorities' revenue and capital allocations in 1989-90 are shown in the tables.

[3] £68 million extra is available for AIDS bringing the total provision in 1989-90 to £129·53 million. The table shows the additional funds health authorities will receive above this year's allocation. Some of the additional £68 million will be allocated to other hospital and community health services groups, for example, the Public Health Laboratory Services Board.

[4]Sum shown is each Region's share of £7·8 million available.
[5]The additional funds available for breast cancer screening total £11 million. A further £1·347 million will be allocated later.
[6]Total cash/percentage increase shown includes each Region's share of £237 million savings resulting from the reduction in employers' superannuation contributions.
[7]Real terms increases have been calculated using the forecast GDP deflator.

Royal Liverpool Hospital

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are currently being treated at the intensive therapy unit of the Royal Liverpool hospital; how many patients have been refused admission to the unit in each week over the past year; and how many staff are currently employed in the unit.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold this information centrally. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairman of the Liverpool health authority for the information he requires.

National Health Service Beds (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many National Health Service beds were lost in (a) Nottingham district health authority and (b) England and Wales in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: Data on net changes in average daily available beds between 1978 and 1979, and between 1986 and 1987-88 are given in the table. Information on Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Hospital Incinerators

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that the money made available for the improvement of hospital incinerators will be spent solely for that purpose regardless of any change in the status of hospital incinerators and their currently being subjected to Crown immunity.

Mr. Freeman: It is for health authorities to determine the allocation of the resources available to them by relating local circumstances to the Government's strategic priorities for the National Health Service. The Department will, however, be monitoring health authorities' progress on the upgrading-replacement of incinerators required to meet new controls on emissions to the atmosphere planned to come into force next year. We shall be neither seeking, nor would expect, Crown immunity from these controls for the National Health Service.

Insulin

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) from which pharmaceutical companies the National Health Service purchased (i) animal insulin, and (ii) human insulin; and what was the cost of transaction with each company for each financial year since 1983-84;

(2) what was the cost to the National Health Service of purchasing (i) animal insulin and (ii) human insulin for each of the financial years since 1983-84.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is set out in the table for the calendar years 1983 and 1987. Information for the intervening years can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Notes:
1. Figures are estimates based on a sample of approximately 1 in 200 prescriptions dispensed by retail pharmacy contractors within the Family Practitioner Service. The figures do not include details of insulin dispensed by the hospital service or of prescriptions dispensed by Dispensing Doctors.
2. The figure for generics relate to prescriptions written by their generic name.

Insulin

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which pharmaceutical companies produce (i) animal insulin, (ii) human insulin, and (iii) both.

Mr. Mellor: The following companies supply insulin in the United Kingdom:

(i) animal insulin
CP Pharmaceuticals Ltd.
Evans Medical Ltd.
(ii) human insulin
Eli Lilly and Co., Ltd.
(iii) human and animal insulin
Novo Laboratories Ltd.
Nordisk/Wellcome

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on how many diabetics used (i) animal insulin, and (ii) human insulin for each year since 1983.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect centrally information about patients and their drugs, but the number of prescriptions for animal and human insulin dispensed by community pharmacists in each of 1983 and 1987 is shown in the table. Information for the intervening years can be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information from the hospital services indicates that in 1987-88 approximately 350,000 units of insulin were supplied of which 75 per cent. were human based.

Single Market

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what effect the removal of barriers and frontiers will have in 1992 on the movement of bodies from one European Economic Community member state to another.

Mr. Mellor: None that I am aware of.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library the report on salmonella food poisoning by Dr. Bernard Rowe, the director of enteric pathogens in the central public health laboratory.

Mr. Freeman: The report referred to is in fact a paper prepared by Dr. Rowe for use by the current working group on salmonella and eggs comprising representatives of the egg industry, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the public health laboratory service acting for this Department. The report of the working group is still being prepared.

Disability Survey

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking in relation to the OPCS disability survey commissioned by him.

Mr. Mellor: Primary responsibility for this lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security. But the Department of Health will be alert to any findings that relate to health or social services. It will not be possible to draw any firm conclusions, however, until all the reports are available.

Prescriptions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the total expenditure on (a) family practitioner services and (b) general practitioner prescribed prescriptions in England in cash terms and real terms for each year since 1980, and also expressing both as an index based upon 1980.

Mr. Mellor: Gross expenditure on family practitioner services, and on the pharmaceutical services, including remuneration costs, in England since 1980-81 is given in the tables in cash and in real terms.

Table 1: Gross expenditure on Family Practitioner Services. England

Special Hospitals

Miss Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in special hospitals are currently awaiting transfer to other National Health Service hospitals; and how many of these have been waiting for (a) one to two years, (b) two to three years, (c) three to four years, and (d) over four years.

Mr. Freeman: There are 47 patients in the special hospitals who have been recommended for a move to another hospital on trial leave or transfer and who are currently awaiting a vacancy in an identified hospital. Of these, four patients have been waiting for one to two years, and two patients for two to three years; none have been waiting for longer than three years. The length of wait has been calculated:

(i) in the case of patients subject to restrictions under the Mental Health Act, from the date on which the Home Secretary's consent to transfer was obtained, and

(ii) in the case of unrestricted patients, from the date on which a placement was agreed between the special hospital and the receiving hospital.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authorities are making free vaccination available against hepatitis B to their staff; and what percentage of those at risk this covers.

Mr. Mellor: I regret that we do not hold this information centrally.

Midwives

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations he initiated or engaged in with the Royal College of Midwives, or any qualified midwife, concerning the content of the management guidance document distributed to general managers of Health Service units in May; and what specific guidance was contained in this document in respect of the duties and grading of midwives.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The management guidance on implementation of the new clinical grading structure was the subject of extensive consultation with senior nurses and midwives and other managers in the National Health Service. It was managements' guidance to management about the implementation of a grading structure negotiated with the trades unions and I see no sensible reason why such guidance should have been the subject of consultation with staff side organisations. The guidance as a whole relates equally to nursing and midwifery posts because the grading structure as negotiated with the trades unions and endorsed by the independent review body relates equally to both.

Breast Cancer (Screening)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women are likely to be screened for breast cancer in the Pontefract district health authority in (a) 1989, (b) 1990 and (c) 1991.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 14 December at column 605.

Retired People

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department have carried out into the attitudes of retired people towards (a) an increase in the number of centres offering them help and advice and (b) investment in pioneer surgery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have not commissioned any research that is specifically directed to these topics.

Young Drinkers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the percentage of 17 to 18-year-olds drinking three or more times a week; to what social factors he attributes excessive drinking among young people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The most recently available information is contained in two reports on surveys conducted by OPCS. These are "Adolescent Drinking—1984" and "Drinking in England and Wales in 1987". Copies are in the Library.

In the adolescent drinking survey about a third of 17-year-old boys and a quarter of 17-year-old girls reported drinking on three or more days a week. Separate information on drinking by 18-year-olds is not readily available. The causes of excessive drinking among young people are many and varied and, inter-relate in ways which are not fully understood. The ministerial group on alcohol misuse, which co-ordinates Government action in this field, have identified the need for further research into young people's attitudes to alcohol and drinking behaviour; the group is currently taking steps to see how this might best be undertaken.

Cervical Cytology Screening

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of health authorities is failing to comply with Government cervical cytology screening guidelines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We issued guidelines covering many aspects of cervical cancer screening to health authorities in January 1988. All health authorities have now implemented computerised call and recall systems. Approximately 25 per cent. of health authorities are currently not meeting the Government's target of reporting the result of a smear within one month to the doctor who submitted it. Health authorities' performance is monitored and those not meeting this target are asked to explain what remedial action they are taking.

Abortions

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated average cost of a National Health Service abortion broken down into (a) revenue cost, and (b) total cost, and whether he can estimate average cost by method of operation for the latest available year.

Mr. Freeman: The estimated revenue cost of an abortion in NHS hospitals is £190. We do not have available information on the total cost and average cost by method of operation.

Adoption

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he proposes to lay an order under section 57(8) of the Adoption Act 1976 to enable adoption agencies to continue to operate adoption allowance schemes approved by him beyond 15 February 1989, when the experimental period introduced in 1982 under section 32 of the Children Act 1975 will end.

Mr. Mellor: We have published, in accordance with the requirements of section 57(6) of the Adoption Act 1976, a report of a research project commissioned by the Department from the National Children's Bureau into the operation of adoption allowance schemes in England and Wales. The research findings show that adoption allowance schemes have succeeded in their objective of enabling adoption agencies to find suitable adoptive families for children who could not otherwise enjoy the benefits and security of adoption. We intend, therefore, to lay an order under section 57(8) which, subject to the agreement of both Houses, allows adoption agencies to continue to submit schemes for approval by the Secretary of State and to operate approved schemes.

Research Priorities

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his Department's priorities for research in the fields of health and personal social services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The research programmes directly supported by the Department are designed to contribute to the efficiency of the health and social services by promoting improvements in organisation, operation and management.

Bearing in mind the primary responsibility of the Medical Research Council for biomedical and clinical research, we have concluded that the health and personal social services programme should now concentrate on the following areas:

Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS); professional manpower;
primary health care;
the demands on, and effectiveness of, acute sector services;
the transition to, and maintenance of, community care;
consumer attitudes to the health and personal social services;
the influencing of lifestyles, for example in relation to drug abuse; child abuse.

The Department will also be contributing to a programme of breast cancer screening research in follow-up to the research recommendations of the Forrest report.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment Benefit (Adjudication)

Mr. Lofthouse To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many cases are currently being dealt with by unemployment benefit adjudication officers in Pontefract and Castleford;

(2) how many unemployment benefit adjudication officers are available to the constituency of Pontefract and Castleford;

(3) what is the current waiting time for adjudication officers to adjudicate on cases currently being dealt with by unemployment benefit adjudication officers in Pontefract and Castleford.

Mr. Cope: Information is not available in the precise form requested, as adjudication officers are not attached to individual unemployment benefit offices or constituencies. They work in groups which cover a number of offices.

On 9 December 1988, adjudication officers were currently considering 2,138 cases arising on claims for unemployment benefit in the adjudication office area of York, which includes the constituency of Pontefract and Castleford. The number of adjudication officers serving the York adjudication office is nine.

No figures are held on the waiting time for an adjudication officer's decision, but the speed with which adjudication officers make decisions—the time taken between their receiving a case and reaching a decision after making all the necessary inquiries—is monitored in a 5 per cent. sample of cases.

The sample for the York adjudication office shows that, for the three-month period ending 30 June 1988, a total of 93 per cent. of cases were decided within four weeks of referral to an adjudication officer.

Environment and Safety Information Act

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provision has been made to ensure the implementation of the Environment and Safety Information Act.

Mr. Nicholls: Arrangements are being made to ensure that all authorities with enforcement responsibilities under statutes listed in the schedule of the Act will make the required information available to the public by 1 April 1989.

Tourism

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the European Community document 8794/88 (proposal for action programme for European Tourism Year 1990) will be ratified by Her Majesty's Government; and when the proposals contained therein will become effective.

Mr. Lee: At the Tourism Council on 14 December 1988, European Community Ministers agreed the proposal on an action programme for the European Tourism Year in 1990. The Commission in consultation with representatives of member states will take appropriate measures to implement the programme. Preparatory work will begin early in the new year.

Work Permits

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether a decision has yet been made to continue after 1988 the special annual quota of work permits for workers from the dependent territories whose level of skill is below that required by the general work permit scheme.

Mr. Lee: Yes. It has been decided that the quota for 1989 will be 200—the same as this year. Within the figure of 200, no more than 150 permits will be allowed for any one territory.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he is taking professional advice on the feasibility of moving the Skills Training Agency into the private sector, as indicated in chapter 4 of the White Paper, "Employment in the 1990s".

Mr. Fowler: I am appointing Deloitte, Haskins and Sells, a leading accountancy and management consultancy firm, to advise me on the feasibility of such a move. I expect to receive its advice in the new year.

Rehabilitation Centres

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many clients passed through the employment rehabilitation centres in 1978, 1979, 1986, 1987 and 1988; and how many staff were employed in the employment rehabilitation centres in those years.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 20 December 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number of clients helped	Number of staff employed
1978-79	15,670	824
1979-80	16,000	895
1986-87	14,790	686
1987-88	16,000	671·5
1988-89	[1]26,000	[2]664·5

[2] As at 30 November 1988.

From 1985 the employment rehabilitation service has been delivered through assistance towards employment centres as well as employment rehabilitation centres. The information given includes both types of centre.

Employment Training

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what organisations have been granted employment training agent contracts; what are the planned volumes of trainees in the first six months; and what numbers of trainees have been through at the most recently available date for each Department of employment training agency area;

(2) what are the numbers of approved places allocated under employment training; what are the area budgets for the programme; and what are the allocations of supplementary grant for each Department of Employment Training Agency area for each area.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 12 December 1988]: Information on the types of organisations which have been granted training agency contracts in employment training is given in table 1.

Information on the actual training agent throughput in September and October 1988, the allocation of filled places (allocations are made on the basis of filled places not approved places, which do not exist in ET), total planned expenditure and supplementary grant allocation is given in table 2.

Information on the profiles of training agent volumes is for internal management only.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria have been used by the Department of Employment Training Agency area offices to assess bids for approved training agents and approved training managers' contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 12 December 1988]: Contracts for training agents and training managers were negotiated on the basis of written proposals submitted to Training Agency area offices. The Training Agency considered the quality of the training offered; the ways in which the proposed training related to the needs of the local labour market; the previous experience and financial viability of the organisations concerned; and the cost-effective use of the available resources. Contracts were awarded on the basis that every organisation would have to meet the criteria for approved status by March 1990. My right hon. Friend is satisfied that the right criteria were used.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the profiles of the number of expected starts, excluding conversion from other programmes, on employment training for the months of September, October and November for each Department of Employment Training Agency area.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 12 December 1988]: Profiles of starts with training managers are for internal management purposes only.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many bids had been (a) received for ATA and ATM contracts, (b) accepted and (c) refused for each Department of Employment Training Agency area, at the most recent available date.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The information requested is given in the following table:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Identity Cards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has investigated, or is currently studying, the usefulness of a national identity card to his departmental responsibilities; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department on 15 December at column 1080. This subject is kept under review but my Department has no responsibilities at present requiring the issue of identity cards.

Egg Inspectors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the present establishment of egg inspectors among (a) Ministry of Agriculture veterinarians, (b) Health and Safety Executive agriculture inspectors, (c) the general egg marketing inspectorate (Ministry of Agriculture), (d) environmental health officers and (e) trading standards officers; by what percentage each of these inspectorates are below establishment; what is the average frequency of inspections carried out by each individual inspectorate; and if he will make a statement as to the function of each inspectorate.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The only one of these groups with an establishment of egg inspectors is the Ministry's egg marketing inspectorate. This comprises 32 inspectors. It is currently 3 per cent. (one inspector) below complement. The average frequency of inspections is two and a half per day per inspector.

The function of the inspectorate is to enforce the EC's regulations on egg marketing and hatching eggs at all marketing stages up to but excluding retail level. It is also required to undertake visits to retailers at the request of trading standards officers who have responsibility for enforcing these regulations at retail level.

Deer (Tuberculosis)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why his Department's tests on deer imported from Hungary failed to spot the presence of tuberculosis; and what steps he is taking to improve the animal health evaluation techniques of his Department.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Some deer imported into this country in 1985 under Hungarian certification were subsequently found to be infected with tuberculosis and all were traced. Our import requirements at that time included pre-export testing by the country of origin and quarantine but not testing on arrival. Following the 1985 incident, the import controls were strengthened to require more stringent pre-export isolation and testing and post-import tuberculosis testing. No case of tuberculosis has been detected in deer which have been imported since January 1986.

The only validated test currently available for the diagnosis of tuberculosis in deer is the tuberculin test. It is recognised that this test is not as sensitive in deer as in cattle and, in consequence; its interpretation has been amended. When used at suitable intervals and interpreted in accordance with the revised guidelines, it remains the best method of detecting the disease in deer.

Research into an Elisa test has been carried out at the central veterinary laboratory while the Morodum research institute is looking at a lymphocyte transformation test, but it is too early to say if either could be used in the field.

ITB Pension Fund

Mr. Stern: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to allow pensioners of the ITB pension fund's closed fund to have their pensions paid into a building society account.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In conjunction with the Department of Employment, approval for such an amendment to the rules of the ITB pension funds's closed fund has recently been given. The pension fund's trustees were advised of this on 6 December 1988.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the research known to his Department which is relevant to food poisoning and has been (a) ongoing and (b) commissioned in each of the last five years; and if he will state the source of funding in each case.

Mr. Ryder: The following list of research projects covers most of the publicly funded research relevant to microbial food poisoning ongoing and newly commissioned over the past two years. A fuller reply could be prepared only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what funding has been provided by his Department for the salmonella research being carried out by Dr. Geoffrey Mead at the Institute of Food Research in Bristol; what were the objectives of the research; what information has been obtained from it; when the funding is to cease; if a request has been made for it to continue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Bob Cryer) on 8 December.

SCOTLAND

Tourism

15. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the administrative costs of promoting Scottish tourism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: It is estimated that STB's administration costs will amount to £957,000 in the current financial year. Expenditure on administration is 14 per cent. of the board's grant-in-aid provision of £6·8 million.

Rating Reform

16. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made towards the implementation of the community charge in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Arrangements for the introduction of the community charge in April next year are proceeding well. All the necessary regulations are now in place or will shortly be in place. Registration officers and levying authorities are making good progress in discharging their responsibilities.

19. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the proposed combined region and district contribution which community charge payers living in Caithness district and in Sutherland district will be expected to make to the revenue support grant safety net.

Mr. Lang: Without the safety net, revenue support grant per adult would be £12 or 1·5 per cent. higher for Caithness and £45 or 5·5 per cent. higher for Sutherland. Even allowing for this, grant for next year, taking into account also the grant for Highland region, is being increased by £74 or 10·5 per cent. per adult in Caithness and by £95 or 13·3 per cent. per adult in Sutherland.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the number of second homes liable for the standard community charge.

Mr. Lang: It is estimated that as at 30 June 1986 there were 19,446 second homes in Scotland. This figure is derived from information supplied by local authorities.

43. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received from the Scottish Trades Union Congress regarding the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no recent representations from the Scottish Trades Union Congress on the community charge.

57. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what he estimates will be the average level of community charge in Scotland in 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, West (Mr. Douglas).

60. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the annual cost of collection of the poll tax in Scotland; and what is the current equivalent cost of collection of rates.

Mr. Lang: The estimated cost of administering the community charge and non-domestic rating in 1989-90 is £44 million. The cost of administering the rating system in the current year is estimated at £26 million.

65. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made towards the implementation of the community charge in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Arrangements for the introduction of the community charge in April next year are proceeding well. All the necessary regulations are now in place or will shortly be in place. Registration officers and levying authorities are making good progress in discharging their responsibilities.

Tenants (Transfers)

17. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that each Scottish Special Housing Association tenant in Lothians and throughout Scotland will have the final say over the transfer of their house to any private landlord; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 will give individual tenants of the Scottish Special Housing Associations the right of choosing to transfer to a new private landlord. As far as voluntary disposals by public sector landlords are concerned, my right hon. and learned Friend will withhold his consent to any proposed voluntary disposal if a majority of tenants is opposed.

NHS Patients

20. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made towards providing an internal and external market for National Health Service patients in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend is currently considering a wide range of possible developments with a view to providing a better service for National Health Service patients in Scotland.

District Councils

22. Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what future changes in functions he proposes for district councils.

Mr. Rifkind: I have no plans to change the range of functions for which district councils are responsible.

"Keep Warm this Winter"

23. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many calls have been made to freefone 0800 838587 following the publication by the Scottish Health Education Group's leaflet, "Keep Warm this Winter".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Between 17 November, when the "Keep Warm this Winter" campaign was launched, and 11 December there have been 283 calls.

Manufacturing Exports

24. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the level of Scottish manufacturing exports achieved in 1987.

Mr. Lang: The preliminary results of the survey of Scottish manufactured exports for 1987, conducted by the Scottish Council (development & industry), indicate that exports of Scottish manufactured goods increased by 13 per cent. in value. Scottish manufactured exports per employee were 16 per cent. higher than the comparable United Kingdom figure and exceeded the levels attained by West Germany and Japan.

Local Government Act 1988

25. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has had any recent discussions with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on the current progress of implementing the Local Government Act 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no such discussions recently. General guidance to local authorities on the provisions of the Act and its implementation was contained in departmental circulars issued on 6 April, 20 May and 23 August 1988.

Labour Statistics

26. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current rate of unemployment in Scotland; what was the level in August 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Seasonally adjusted unemployment in Scotland currently stands at 10·8 per cent. of the work force compared with 12·6 per cent. in August 1984. Since January 1987 seasonally adjusted unemployment in Scotland has fallen by nearly 74,000 and is now at its lowest level for seven years.

32. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current level of unemployment in Scotland; and what was the figure in 1979.

Mr. Lang: Seasonally adjusted unemployment in Scotland in November 1988 was 266,900; the corresponding figure for November 1979 was 140,600.

Bus Companies (Takeover)

27. Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what protection he intends to give to the future Scottish Bus company against takeovers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply earlier today to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid).

Scottish Homes

28. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made towards the establishment of Scottish Homes on 1 April 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingham) on 9 November at column 293.

The Scottish Homes Board held its first formal meeting on 5 December when a number of decisions were taken on matters relating to the staffing and organisation of Scottish Homes. A number of appointments to senior posts within Scottish Homes have now been made and other posts have been advertised. An order has been made under section 3(1) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1989 confirming that the responsibilities and obligations of the Scottish Special Housing Association and the Housing Corporation in respect of its Scottish functions will be transferred to Scottish Homes with effect from 1 April 1989. I have determined that all staff of the SSHA and the Housing Corporation in respect of the Scottish functions should receive offers of employment in accordance with the terms of schedule 1 to the 1988 Act by 31 December 1988. The relevant offers of employment were in fact issued by Scottish Homes on 16 December.

Single Market

29. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the level of business awareness there is in Scotland of the opportunities presented by 1992 and the completion of the single market in Europe.

Mr. Lang: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) today.

Newbattle Abbey College

31. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has had any recent discussions with the governors about the future of Newbattle Abbey college; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There have been no meetings since my officials met representatives from the board on 25 January.

In July, following an acknowledgement by the board that radical changes in the college's provision were necessary, my right hon. and learned Friend made clear the basis on which he was prepared to consider continued funding of the college after the end of the present academic year. In particular he would require, by the end of this year, evidence of firm and specific undertakings by education authorities and higher education institutions to make extensive use of Newbattle in support of their wider access activities. No response has yet been received from the governors.

East Coast Railway Line (Electrification)

33. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has discussed with British Rail the electrification of the east coast line between Aberdeen and Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland met the chairman of British Rail, Sir Robert Reid on 15 November 1988 and discussed a wide range of issues. Responsibility for investment is a matter for the British Railways Board, not the Government. However, I understand that the board's view is that the level of traffic would not justify electrifying the line north of Edinburgh.

Kyle of Lochalsh and Kyleakin (Road)

34. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to meet representatives of the Highland regional council to discuss the prospects for the building of a road between Kyle of Lochalsh and Kyleakin, Isle of Skye; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to meet Highland regional council for this purpose but officials of the Scottish Development Department have met officials of the Highland regional council to discuss the feasibility study prepared by the regional council.

Electricity Bill

35. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the effect of the Electricity Bill on Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Since the publication of the Electricity Bill on 1 December my right hon. and learned Friend has received four written representations. In addition, I have met representatives of the Scottish Electricity trade unions committee when a range of matters relating to the Electricity Bill was discussed.

"No Turning Back"

36. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy towards the issues raised in the recent publication, "No Turning Back," on Scottish separation, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Rifkind: The concept of Scottish independence in Europe as proposed in this pamphlet written by the right hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Sillars) is no more than a useful slogan adopted by the right hon. Gentleman and his colleagues as a device to avoid their party appearing to have a separatist identity. I also note the hon. Gentleman's advocacy in that pamphlet of a power of direct taxation for the European Parliament.

Convention of Scottish Local Authorities

37. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Rifkind: I hope next to meet representatives of COSLA on Friday 28 April 1989, to start consultations on the revenue support grant settlement for 1990-91.

Damp Housing

38. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to eradicate dampness in council and Scottish Special Housing Association property.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for eradicating dampness in local authority houses rests with the local authorities themselves. It is up to them to decide how much of the resources available to them should be used for this purpose. To assist this the Secretary of State has made increasing capital allocations available for work on authorities' own stock. In recent years these have included special allocations for tackling condensation and dampness, rising to £27 million in the current year, though authorities have been free to spend more on this if they wish. For 1989-90 we are increasing overall allocations by £45 million (as well as subsuming the special allocations into the general allocations). This means that authorities will continue to be well placed to carry out work to which they attach priority.

In recent years as par of a general programme of improvement of its existing stock, the Scottish Special Housing Association has maintained successive annual programmes of central heating installation and the provision of improved thermal insulation. In the current year the association will spend £3·6 million on work of this type involving 3,550 houses. In its programme of comprehensive modernisation of non-traditional houses, now nearing completion, similar improvements have been undertaken in almost 14,000 houses to date.

Health Boards (Appointments)

39. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet each health board prior to any new appointments to that board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

46. Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce new appointments to health boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to announce the names of new members of health boards early in the new year.

Health Boards (Tendering)

40. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what savings have been made to health boards in Scotland as a result of competitive tendering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The contracts awarded so far will release savings of more than £15 million in the following three years for reinvestment in direct patient care.

61. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what savings have been made to health boards in Scotland as a result of competitive tendering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall).

Electricity Industry Privatisation

41. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the volume of electricity likely to be sold by the Scottish electricity industry to England following privatisation.

Mr. Lang: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris).

Constitutional Convention

42. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received seeking a Scottish constitutional convention.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the Member for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Galloway) on 9 November at column 228. Both letters received advocated a Scottish constitutional convention.

Dog Pollution Schemes

44. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will issue model byelaws for the use of local authorities who wish to set up dog pollution schemes to protect children, similar to those operating in England and Wales.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend plans to consult on this and other issues arising from a review of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 early next year. In doing so he will seek views on alternatives, including byelaws, to the way in which the present provisions of the Act address the problem.

Manufacturing Exports

45. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the level of Scottish manufacturing exports achieved in 1987.

Mr. Lang: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) today.

Bus Industry (Buyouts)

47. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has plans to give financial assistance to management/employee buyouts within the bus transport industry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Management-employee teams wanting to bid for their companies will be given financial help towards the costs of advice and consultancy needed to mount bids, on the terms recently announced by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Constitutional Reform

48. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to introduce a devolved assembly or parliament for Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The Government believe that the present constitutional arrangements provide for Scotland's interests to be fully respected and recognised. The Government therefore have no plans to introduce a devolved assembly or parliament for Scotland.

Nurses (Regrading)

49. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the regrading of nurses in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have received various representations from nurses, members of the public and hon. Members. Correspondents have been advised that in accepting the pay review body's recommendations the Government have awarded nurses their biggest ever pay increase while introducing a grading structure which will improve both career prospects and ward management.

Those nurses who are unhappy with their new grades have been recommended to lodge appeals with their health boards as soon as possible.

Channel Tunnel

50. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies have been carried out by his Department into whether the siting of a Channel tunnel passenger terminal to the north of central London would assist in bringing greater prosperity to Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has had meetings with the chairman of the British Rail Board on how to ensure that Scotland benefits fully from the Channel tunnel. The Scottish Development Agency has commissioned a report from consultants to consider the likely impact of the Channel tunnel on Scotland and ways in which the potential benefits can be maximised. British Rail intends to run through trains from Scotland and the north of England to the continent via the tunnel. I am in no doubt that the efficient and speedy operation of these services will be of major importance for the prosperity of Scotland.

Scottish TUC

51. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet representatives of the Scottish Trade Unions Congress; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Lang: I have agreed to meet the General Council of the Scottish Trades Union Congress on 27 January 1989 to discuss matters affecting the Scottish economy.

Education Reform

52. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and other interested parties concerning the proposed legislation for opting out of Scottish local authority schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie).

Post Offices

53. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had on the proposed downgrading of main post offices in Scotland to self-employed, franchised counter services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received one representation, from Lairg community council, against the downgrading of Lairg post office to sub-post office status. The day-to-day management of the Post Office business is the responsibility of the Post Office Board. The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is, however, responsible for general policy. I understand the proposals to regrade a number of Crown post offices to sub-post offices were made on the grounds of commercial and service considerations.

Drug Abuse (Govan)

54. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding and other assistance his Department will provide to community groups formed in Glasgow, Govan constituency for the purpose of mobilising the community to combat drug abuse.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have taken a wide range of positive measures to encourage and assist local action to combat the problem of drug misuse. The primary responsibility for planning and developing services to prevent drug misuse and provide help for drug misusers and their families rests with health boards and local authorities, but applications for central funding under schemes such as the urban programme will certainly be considered.

Electricity Boards

55. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of the Scottish electricity boards; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of the Scottish electricity boards on 4 July when the structural arrangements for the privatised industry in Scotland were discussed.

Power Stations (Coal Burn)

56. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board to discuss the coal burn of Scottish power stations.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board from time to time to discuss a wide range of matters affecting the electricity supply industry.

Renfrew, West and Inverclyde (Employment)

58. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for coping with the employment implications of the proposed job losses in Renfrew, West and Inverclyde constituency arising from the announced rundown of 1,150 jobs from Bishopton Royal Ordnance factory and the proposed transfer of CalMac head office from Greenock to Oban.

Mr. Lang: The hon. Member will be aware from my answer to his earlier question on 9 November that my right hon. and learned Friend and I have been in touch with, respectively, the chairmen of British Aerospace and of Royal Ordnance. The chairman of Royal Ordnance has informed me that there will be no redundancies before October 1989. This should allow time for the company and other interested organisations, like the Scottish Development Agency, to develop their plans to relieve the effects of these redundancies as far as possible. The Scottish Development Agency has already begun discussions. My right hon. and learned Friend will be meeting the chairman of British Aerospace in January to discuss the company's interests in Scotland generally, including Royal Ordnance Bishopton.

There is a case for moving the headquarters of Caledonian MacBrayne nearer to its centre of operations.

This will require careful consideration and no final decision has been made. My right hon. and learned Friend will expect the new board of Caledonian MacBrayne to appraise fully and report upon the arguments for this move.

Education Bill

59. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what assessment of likely level of demand he based his decision to introduce the forthcoming Education Bill for Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proposed Education Bill will deal with a range of matters of varying importance and general concern. There is evidence of significant interest among parents in the concept of self-governing schools outwith local authority control.

Bus Companies (Takeover)

62. Mr. Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which regional bus groups he has met to discuss the privatisation proposals for the Scottish Transport Group contained in the Transport (Scotland) Bill.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has not met representatives of any bus companies for this purpose. I recently visited the Falkirk depot of Midland Scottish Omnibuses Ltd to hear the views of the management and employees of the typical company on the privatisation of the Scottish Bus Group.

Council House Rents

63. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give his calculations of rent increases for council house tenants in Glasgow in the next year; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for Glasgow district council to determine the rent increases which will apply to its housing stock. The draft Housing Support Grant (Scotland) Order 1989 provides that the council will receive grant of £27·9 million to help with its council housing costs in 1989-90. In addition, the Housing Revenue Accounts General Fund Contribution Limits (Scotland) Order 1988 will enable the council to estimate for a contribution of up to £2·2 million to be carried from its general fund to its housing revenue account in 1989-90. Together, these subsidies to council housing amount to £30·1 million, or 47 per cent. of the total council housing subsidies expected to be made for 1989-90 in Scotland as a whole.

The proposed level of subsidies for Glasgow district council was intended to restrict the rent increases for 1989-90 to an average of £2·00 per dwelling per week. I estimate that, on the basis of reasonable assumptions about income and expenditure and excluding certain loan charges expenditure arising from covenant agreements, rents in Glasgow need not increase by more than this amount. The council entered into its covenant commitments in the knowledge that their cost would be disregarded for the purposes of subsidy calculations.

Tayside Health Board

64. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what savings have been made by Tayside health board as a result of competitive tendering.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Annual recurrent savings of nearly £148,000 have been achieved by the contracts awarded so far.

Electricity Boards (Capital Debt)

66. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has concerning the capital debt of the Scottish electricity boards.

Mr. Lang: The boards' capital structures will require to be revised prior to privatisation to create an appropriate ratio of debt to equity. The aim will be to choose a capital structure which maximises the returns to the taxpayer and also creates two financially robust companies.

Business Rating Practices

67. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress being made to harmonise business rating practices between Scotland and England and Wales.

Mr. Lang: We are making good progress towards implementing our declared objective of harmonising business rates between Scotland and England and Wales. The problem is not new, but we are the first Government to have taken action to tackle it. Our objective is one which can only be achieved by stages, but a number of steps have already been taken that will bring us closer to harmony within the next two years. Further steps are under detailed consideration to carry that work further, and we have always made it clear that some of the mechanics of the later steps towards harmonisation will have to await the outcome of earlier ones. Our purpose, to achieve at the earliest opportunity fairness for Scottish businesses and better protection from the depredations of high-spending local councils, has never wavered.

Scottish Development Agency

68. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with the chairman of the Scottish Development Agency about the level of employment in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend and I met the chairman and board of the Scottish Development Agency on 16 May to discuss strategic issues which might be reflected in the agency's planning and budgeting process. Among other subjects, we discussed ways in which the agency might help to improve employment levels in particular areas of Scotland.

Scottish NFU

69. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet representatives of the Scottish National Farmers Union; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Both my right hon. and learned Friend and my noble Friend the Minister of State meet representatives of the Scottish National Farmers Union regularly. My noble Friend met the Union's general purposes committee last week for a very wide-ranging discussion of current issues.

Employment Training Scheme

70. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many local authorities have agreed to participate in the Government's employment training scheme.

Mr. Lang: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) earlier today.

Scottish Bus Group

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the consequences of privatisation of the Scottish Bus Group for consumers in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: One of the objectives of privatisation is to increase competition and encourage companies to be more responsive to their customers. Locally based companies should be better placed to meet local needs and management will be freer to respond to local demands on the basis of local knowledge.

Donor Cards

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the number of people whose organs are likely to be suitable for donation for transplant who are currently carrying donor cards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not possible to estimate how many people carry donor cards. The number of donor cards issued in Scotland since the inception of the scheme considerably exceeds the country's total population. It is the Government's policy to ensure that the cards are distributed as widely as possible, through central initiatives and local efforts.

Transplant Surgery

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the availability of hearts, livers, pancreases, kidneys, lungs and eyes for transplant surgery.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Only kidney and corneal transplants are carried out in Scotland, although of course all organs donated can be used anywhere in the United Kingdom, wherever the most suitable tissue match can be found. The number of multiple organ donations in the United Kingdom has risen this year, enabling the heart, lung and liver transplant programmes to advance. It is a matter for serious concern, however, that the number of kidney and corneal transplants in Scotland has decreased over the last few years because suitable organs have not been available. It is important that the public in appreciating the benefit which transplant surgery can offer are aware of the need for organs. Such understanding and awareness are of great assistance to the medical profession in their approach to relatives of potential donors about donation.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the number of people who have died in hospital whose organs would have been suitable for transplant but where no donation was made during the last five years; and if he will list the principal reasons for such action not being taken.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form sought is not available.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients are waiting for transplant operations of (a) heart, (b) liver, (c) pancreas, (d) kidney, (e) lung and (f) cornea, respectively; and what is the maximum and minimum waiting time for such operations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not centrally available. The main constraint in undertaking such operations is the availability of suitable organs.

Elder Cottage Hospital

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Greater Glasgow health board about the disposal of Elder cottage hospital; what guarantees were given on its transfer to the National Health Service on its maintenance for a medical purpose; and what proposals he has for its future.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. There is no legal requirement that the hospital, which has been empty since March 1988, be retained for a medical purpose. The Greater Glasgow health board has recently completed consultation about its proposals for the permanent closure of the hospital, which would require the consent of my right hon. and learned Friend.

Special Housing Association

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what bids he has referred to the Scottish Special Housing Association for the purchase of Scottish Special Housing Association houses in Central Scotland; for which properties; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Only one bid for the purchase of Scottish Special Housing Association houses in central Scotland, has been referred by the Scottish Office to the SSHA. The bid by a group of Scottish Special Housing Association managers was for 25,000 houses in the association's south region and Fife. Having considered the inquiry, the association has announced that it would not agree, in principle, to make a voluntary disposal of stock on the basis proposed.

Hospital Medical Staff

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that health boards implement circular 1988 (GEN) 38 on hospital medical staffing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Specific mechanisms will be introduced to ensure the implementation by health boards of the Government's medical manpower policies. These will include the establishment of health board plan for action groups, specifically charged with the task of advising boards on the complex issues arising from the movement towards achieving a balance in hospital medical staffing; the setting of targets on a continuous three year rolling programme for career registrar posts; and by annual monitoring of the number of doctors at all grades in the hospital service. A reconstituted advisory committee on medical establishments, with a wider membership drawn from major specialty groups and including a health board general manager will advise the Scottish Home and Health Department on the implementation of policy objectives.

Water Pollution

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to introduce in Scotland environmental quality standards in water for certain substances commonly used as moth-proofing agents.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. We expect in the near future to extend environmental quality standards for water in Scotland to cover substances commonly used as moth-proofing agents.

Criminal Convictions (Alcohol)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of criminal convictions of people under 18 years of age where alcohol was directly or indirectly related to the offence.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Four hundred and sixty-one people under the age of 18 had a charge proved against them for drink related offences in 1987. In the official statistics, such offences comprise drunkenness (including the offences of being drunk and incapable, disorderly behaviour on licensed premises and certain others) which accounted for 183 of the cases, drunk driving (133) and offences under the liquor licensing laws (144). No information is available on the number of offences in which alcohol was indirectly related to the offence.

Emigration

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report for each of the years since 1961 (a) the number of persons who have emigrated from Scotland, including those who have emigrated to England, (b) the natural increase in population and (c) (a) as a fraction of (b).

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available does not provide accurate estimates of total emigration from Scotland. The table below presents estimates of net emigration from Scotland (including net emigration to other parts of the United Kingdom). Also shown are data on the natural increase in the population. The figures cover the period 1 July to 30 June in each case. The comparison requested at (c) is not presented, as ratios based on the two series is meaningless.

1961-62	29,900	39,100

Police (Manning Levels)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the current manning levels of police forces in each regional authority area; and what are the recommended manning levels.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The establishments authorised by my right hon. and learned Friend are shown below together with actual strengths as at 30 September 1988.

Force	Authorised Establishment		Actual Strength
	Police[1]	Civilians[2]	Police[1]	Civilians[2]

[1] These figures include officers employed at ports, airports and oil related industries where the cost is not borne entirely by the local authority.
[2] Excludes police cadets and part-time staff.

Police (Recruitment)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what requests he has received in the past year from chief constables or regional councils for additional recruitment to local police forces; and what has been his response in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamiliton: During the past 12 months the following forces have requested establishment increases:

Force	Increase Requested
	Police	Civilians
Central	22	1
Grampian	61	14

Force	Increase Requested: Police	Civilians
Lothian and Borders	46	17
Tayside	—	12

After careful consideration and taking account of advice from Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary all these increases in establishment were authorised by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Trunk Routes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish the findings of his road study of the main trunk routes south of Edinburgh, and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 5 December at column 48 to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson).

Mouthbridge Inquiry

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish his conclusions on the Mouthbridge inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department has today written to Borders regional council about the matter and I am arranging for the hon. Member to receive a copy of the letter.

Arctic Tern

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures are available in Scotland to safeguard the feeding grounds of the Arctic tern; and what progress has been made in implementing them.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Local fishermen have imposed voluntary restrictions on catches of very young sand eels, on which Arctic terns feed extensively, and the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland is monitoring the effectiveness of these measures to determine whether further management measures may be required. DAFS scientists are also participating in, and helping to co-ordinate, a co-operative programme of research designed to establish the reasons for the reduced availability of sand eels for food.

A94

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the junction on the A94 at Stracathro hospital to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Allowing for the time needed to complete the detailed design work, tendering and contract procedures and the construction itself, I anticipate that the new junction will be in use by the end of 1990.

Grampian Health Board (Grading)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff from each of the old grades have been assimilated to each of the new grades in the recent clinical grading structure in Grampian health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the table.

Farm Woodland Scheme

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report, by region, the take-up to date in the less favoured areas of the £30 grant available under the farm woodland scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The scheme opened on 1 October 1988 and those applications received in Scotland are currently being considered by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland and the Forestry Commission. The potential uptake, if these applications are approved, of planting on permanent pasture and rough grazings in the less-favoured areas (which will qualify for payments of £30 per hectare per annum) is as follows:

DAFS Area Office

Areas	Hectares
Highland	48·5
Borders	23·3
Grampian and North East	34·3
Perth and Kinross	8·2
Southern	34·3

Less Favoured Areas

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures are being taken to increase the current rate of payment available for less favoured areas under section 2(3) of the Farm Land and Rural Development Act 1988 in order actively to encourage take-up prior to 30 September 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As the farm woodland scheme was introduced only on 1 October 1988 it would be premature to review the rates of grant.

Town and Country Planning

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conclusions the Government have reached following the consultation on the proposals to modernise the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) (Scotland) Order 1973; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend and I are grateful to all those who commented on the proposals set out in consultation paper of 4 August 1988. The paper attracted over 100 responses, as a result of which we intend to make a number of changes to the original proposals. I shall outline these briefly.

Class 1 Retailing Financial and Professional Services

Our proposals for this class have been proved to be the most controversial in the consultation paper. Although there was some support for the creation of a use class embracing shops and offices selling services directly to the public we have concluded, in view of the opposition to the proposal, not to proceed with the new combined class. We propose instead the creation of 2 classes which would separate shops from financial and professional services and retain the requirement to obtain planning permission for a change of use from shop to office.

Class 2 Food and Drink

Our original proposals involved the creation of a use class embracing hot food shops, cafes, snack-bars and licensed premises. In their comments, however, a number of respondents expressed concern that licensed premises, particularly public houses, generate more severe environmental problems than cafes and snack bars and that this would lead to a significant reduction in residential amenity, particularly in areas of tenement housing. Moreover as a result of the neighbour notification procedures which we introduced the public are now more aware of planning applications for public houses than they would be in the case of applications for licences which are not as widely publicised in the locality. We have considered these comments carefully and have concluded that, in order to meet the concerns of the public on these points, we should exclude premises with a public house license from this use class.

Class 13. Dwellinghouses

Many who commented welcomed the idea of this class, but although we stressed in the consultation paper that the purpose of this class was to clarify the circumstances in which multiple occupancy constitutes development requiring planning permission and was not intended to deal with the social and other issues raised by multiple occupancy, much of the comment has none the less focused on these issues. In response therefore to the concern voiced about the possible weakening of controls over multiple occupancy as a result of the new use class, we intend to amend our proposals so that the class excludes flats and the threshold at which, in planning terms, a change of use from a dwellinghouse to multiple occupancy occurs, is reduced from six persons living together to five.

The Scottish Development Department is currently considering the outcome of a wide ranging consultation exercise on multiple occupancy. These changes to the planning use classes are not intended to pre-empt any action which may be taken as a result of that consultation exercise. If necessary we shall be ready to adjust the provisions of the use classes order to be consistent with other controls over multiple occupancy.

Other proposals in the consultation paper, a copy of which I have placed in the Library of the House, remain largely unchanged. The Scottish Development Department will issue guidance which will explain the operation of the order in more detail when it is brought into force.

Since, under the terms of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972, the revised use classes order does not require to be laid before Parliament for approval, my right hon. and learned Friend will now proceed to make the order comprising the revised use classes. An amendment to the Town and Country Planning (General Development) (Scotland) Order 1981 will also be required to implement certain of our proposals which my right hon. and learned Friend will lay before the House. It is our intention that the revised use classes order and associated general development order amendments will come into force early in 1989.

Adoption Allowance Schemes

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for the future of adoption allowance schemes approved under section 32 of the Children Act 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has published today a summary report on the outcome of a research project designed to assess the effectiveness of the adoption allowance schemes in Scotland. The favourable outcome of that research has led him to the view that schemes, operated on an experimental basis since 1982, should become a continuing feature of adoption legislation. In accordance with the statutory requirement, he will shortly lay an order before Parliament, seeking the approval to provide a permanent statutory base for the schemes by repealing the original temporary provisions.

Shipping Subsidies

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for shipping subsidies for sea transport services to Scotland in 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Subject to parliamentary approval of the estimates, I propose to make available in 1989-90 total subsidy provision of £12·10 million. The deficit subsidy for Caledonian MacBrayne will reduce in line with recent trends in the company's improved performance to £6·28 million. The estimated requirement to continue the fare reduction support for P and O services to Orkney and Shetland is increased to £4·32 million. On the basis of budgets submitted by coastal shippers within the tarriff rebate subsidy scheme, the funding requirement next year will be £1·5 million.

The proposed level of subsidy reflects the Government's continuing commitment to assisting the essential sea transport services to the west coast islands and the Northern Isles.

Pacemakers

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to the answer given by the hon. Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth) to the hon. Member for Eastwood on Friday 9 December, Official Report, column 372-33, what information he has received from the Greater Glasgow health board concerning the allegations made to the board on the utilisation of pacemakers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 December 1988]: I have had inquiries made of Greater Glasgow health board about the allegations over the improper use of pacemakers made by the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith). I understand from the health board that the allegations are without foundation and that the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden has yet to respond to the health board's request for him to apologise.

Foresty Commission

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the area of land sold by the Forestry Commission in each of its conservancies for each year since 1981.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 December 1988]: The area of land sold by the Forestry Commission in each of its conservancies in each year since 1981 was as follows:

Table 1

DEFENCE

Tucano Aircraft

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects all Tucano aircraft to be in service with the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Sainsbury: The contractor estimates that deliveries will be completed by early 1992.

Radar Contracts

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the examination of the tenders for the European fighter aircraft radar contracts to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is hoped that a decision on the winning consortium in the competition for the nose radar for the European fighter aircraft will be made early next year.

Trident

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the progress of the Trident programme.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the next review of the Trident programme is likely to take place.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will announce a revised estimate of the cost of Trident early next year, and at the same time submit a report on the progress of the programme to the Defence Committee. A copy of this report will be placed in the Library of the House.

Foxhunter Radars

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the retrofitting to Tornado aircraft of Foxhunter radars already delivered to the RAF will begin.

Mr. Sainsbury: All Tornado aircraft in front-line service have Foxhunter fitted and the RAF has sufficient radars to meet all its current requirements.

Identity Cards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has investigated, or is currently studying, the usefulness of a national identity card to his departmental responsibilities; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 15 December 1988 at column 1080.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many SSNs will be taken out of active service by the year 2000;

(2) how many SSBNs will be taken out of active service by the year 2000.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 13 April 1988 at column 137.

HMS Dreadnought

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present status and location of HMS Dreadnought; and what plans his Department has for her disposal.

Mr. Sainsbury: Dreadnought has been decommissioned and is berthed at HM naval base, Rosyth. No decisions have yet been taken about how she will be disposed of.

Boeing (Offset Report)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress his Department has made in evaluating the offset reports submitted by Boeing under the terms of the airborne warning and control system offset agreement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Boeing has to date submitted three progress reports claiming offset for contracts valued at $628·3 million. Of the contract values claimed in the first two reports $147·7 million has been approved and $77·5 million rejected as not complying with the agreement. The balance, largely relating to contract values in the third report which has only recently been received, is under evaluation.

Written Answers to Questions

DEFENCE

Force Reductions

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the force reductions announced by Mr. Gorbachev.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Her Majesty's Government welcome the reductions in Soviet forces recently announced by Mr. Gorbachev as a significant step towards the elimination of the Warsaw pact's superiorities in conventional forces in Europe. However, even if the announced reductions are implemented, the Warsaw pact will continue to enjoy significant numerical superiorities in key equipments such as tanks and artillery. NATO must, therefore, continue with its existing policy of deterrence whilst seeking balance in conventional forces in Europe through the arms control process.

Military Strategy

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with Mr. Manfred Wörner, Secretary-General of NATO, on military strategy.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with Mr. Manfred Wörner, Secretary-General of NATO, on military strategy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence last met Dr. Woerner at the meeting of NATO's defence planning committee on 1 and 2 December. They discussed a range of subjects of mutual interest.

Free-fall Bombs

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his latest plans for a nuclear replacement for the Royal Air Force's free-fall bombs.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the reply given on 26 October 1988 by my hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Mr. Sainsbury) to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) at columns 281-82.

United States Defence Secretary

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to meet the new United States Defence Secretary; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence hopes to meet the United States Defence Secretary in the new year. He expects to discuss a range of issues of mutual interest.

Bar Coding

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to improve stock-taking procedures in the armed forces with a system of bar coding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The Comptroller and Auditor General's report on stocktaking in the MOD was published on 1 November 1988 and included observations on the use of bar coding.

The accounting officer, Sir Michael Quinlan, will be giving evidence to the Public Accounts Committee on the contents of the report in due course. Once the PAC has produced its report, the Government's formal response will be given in a Treasury minute, which is in accordance with usual practice.

RAF Machrihanish

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on changes in the past five years to the readiness status of United States Navy weapons units at RAF Machrihanish designated to support the Royal Air Force Nimrod force in time of crisis or war.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to comment on the readiness status of military units.

Equipment Expenditure

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have been recent trends in the proportion of the defence budget spent on equipment; and what assessment has been made of the reasons for these trends.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to table 2.2 of volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988" (Cm 344-II). Planned defence procurement expenditure in 1988-89 allows for a real increase of some 19 per cent. compared with the outturn for 1978-79, using a measure of inflation based on movements in the price of defence equipment. Furthermore, our commercial approach to defence procurement has enabled us to achieve substantially better value for the money which we spend on equipment.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what peacetime attrition rates were assumed for (a) Royal Air Force Tornado GR.1 aircraft and (b) Royal Air Force Tornado F.2/3 aircraft under the production plan agreed in 1982; and what changes have since been made to these assumed rates.

Mr. Neubert: This information is classified.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes were made to the deployment plans for (a) Royal Air Force Tornado GR.1 aircraft and (b) Royal Air Force Tornado F.2/3 aircraft as a result of the sale of Tornado aircraft to Saudi Arabia and Oman.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As a result of the 1985 sale to Saudi Arabia the build-up of the RAF's Tornado GR1 force has proceeded slightly more slowly than had originally been planned.

The recently announced sale of Tornado aircraft to Saudi Arabia and Oman is expected to have no effect upon the Royal Air Force's deployment plans.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the actual attrition rate of the Tornado GR.1 since its entry into Royal Air Force service, expressed in terms of (a) the rate of category 5 accidents per 10,000 flying hours, and (b) the percentage of the total in-service fleet lost in accidents.

Mr. Neubert: Since the entry of the Tornado GR.1 into RAF service in 1980, the major accident rate per 10,000 hours flown was 0·7 as of 16 December 1988. In that time, 17 aircraft (8·5 per cent.) of the total number of aircraft delivered to the service have been destroyed in 16 major accidents.

Vessels (Accidents and Incidents)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all accidents and incidents since 1979 involving Royal Navy vessels and civilian vessels for which compensation was paid by his Department to the owners or operators of the civilian vessel, giving for each accident or incident (a) the date, (b) the names of the vessels involved, (c) the nature and location of the incident and (d) the amount of compensation paid.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Territorial Army

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he takes to exclude (i) Fascist groups and individuals and (ii) mentally unstable persons from access to Territorial Army training and weaponry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Prospective recruits into the Territorial Army are required to declare on their enlistment form any affiliations with certain specified causes and must swear on oath that each answer given on the form is a true one. Training of volunteers, particularly of those in their early years of service, is closely supervised and access to weapons and ammunition is, at all times, strictly controlled. All applicants are additionally subjected to stringent medical examinations.

A10 Aircraft

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to how many United States A-10 planes have crashed (a) in Britain and (b) elsewhere in recent years.

Mr. Neubert: There have been five major accidents involving United States A-10 aircraft in or near to the United Kingdom since 1980, as follows:

Date	Location
18 November 1980	Yarmouth
9 January 1981	Donna Nook, Lincs
8 May 1981	Wainfleet, Lincs
12 December 1983	North Sea off Yarmouth
29 February 1984	Suffolk

Accidents involving this aircraft type elsewhere are a matter for the United States authorities.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will bar the United States Airforce A-10 from overflying built-up areas in the United Kingdom until further notice.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Lance Missile

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation has endorsed deployment of a new warhead for the Lance missile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces on 5 December to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Mrs. Ruddock) at column 73.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department will evaluate the implications of papers 8581 and 8582 presented to the fourth international conference on AIDS in Stockholm in 1988 relating to the effects on visuospatial skills amongst males with early HIV infection and relating to a general deficit of vigilance amongst HIV positive individuals; and if he will make a statement regarding his policy of not screening all pilots for HIV.

Mr. Neubert: The Ministry of Defence is well aware of the content of the papers 8581 and 8582 presented to the fourth international conference on AIDS in Stockholm in 1988. I refer my hon. Friend to my predecessor's reply on 20 May 1988 at col. 611-12.

Property in Scotland

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what heritable property owned by his Department in Scotland has been sold in the last 10 years for which information is available; to whom it was sold in each case; and what price was obtained in each case.

Mr. Neubert: This information is not readily available in the form requested and the need for commercial confidentiality would in any case limit the amount of information that could be disclosed. A review of our records is being undertaken with the aim of providing some information and I shall write to the hon. and learned Member.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answers of 5 December, Official Report, columns 70-73, he will list the approximate value of the heritable property in each case of the bases and establishments owned by his Department in Scotland.

Mr. Neubert: No. This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has any plans to sell any of the bases and establishments owned by his Department in Scotland and listed in his answers of 5 December, Official Report, columns 70-73.

Mr. Neubert: There are no firm plans to sell off any of the bases and establishments listed in my hon. Friends answers of 5 December, Official Report, columns 70-73. As the hon. Member will appreciate, however, the Defence estate is kept under continuing review to ensure that the area retained is the minumum necessary to meet essential requirements.

Low Flying

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints about low flying were received by his Department in each year since 1979 from addresses in the Cunninghame, North constituency.

Mr. Neubert: Figures prior to 1986 are not available but since then, according to available records, the Ministry of Defence has received a total of 13 complaints or inquiries about military low flying from addresses in the Cunninghame, North constituency. These are as follows:

Year	Number of complaints/ enquiries
1986	3
1987	6
1988 to 31 October	4

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the Gazelle AH 1 helicopter, serial number XZ328, operated by the Army Air Corps, was authorised to operate in low flying area 14 on 5 May; and what information he has on its routing;

(2) if the Lynx AH 1 helicopter, serial number ZX614, operated by 3 Commando Brigade Air Squadron, Royal Marines, was authorised to operate in low flying area 14 on 5 May; and what information he has on its routing;

(3) if he will make a further statement on the outcome of the inquiry into the incident involving a helicopter and a civilian car near Dalmally, Argyll on 5 May.

Mr. Neubert: I assume that the hon. Gentleman's questions all refer to allegations from the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) about an incident involving a helicopter and a civilian car in the Tyndrum area on 5 May. During our investigations, the hon. Lady estimated the time of the incident to be between 3.45 and 4.15 pm. These investigations, as reported by my predecessor in his letter to the hon. Gentleman of 10 August 1988 confirmed that no military helicopters were operating in the Tyndrum area during this period. The Royal Marines 3rd Brigade Air Squadron Lynx AH 1 helicopter, serial number ZX614, referred to by the hon. Gentleman, landed near the Kyle of Lochalsh at around 12.55 pm, and remained on the ground for the rest of the day. The Army Air Corps Gazelle AH 1 helicopter, serial number XZ328, similarly referred to, passed some miles west of Dalmally at around 3 pm and landed at HMS Gannet at 3.30 pm. At 3.48 pm it departed and flew south to RAF Church Fenton, landing at 4.58 pm. I have nothing further to add to my predecessor's letter of 6 December.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list those medical establishments on the Island of Arran over which military low flying is prohibited;

(2) what advice is given to military pilots concerning low-level flying over Lochranza, Arran;

(3) what advice is given to military pilots concerning low-level flying over Lamlash, Arran;

(4) what advice is given to military pilots concerning low-level flying over Brodick, Arran.

Mr. Neubert: Military aircraft are instructed not to overfly major conurbations at low level. Unfortunately it is not possible to avoid many smaller centres of population, although pilots will do so if possible. It is not our practice to release details of the United Kingdom low flying system.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the total number of low-level terrain-following radar flights in the Highlands restricted area in each year since 1980; and how many of these were flown by (a) RAF Tornados, (b) RAF Hercules, (c) US Air Force F-111s, (d) US Air Force RF-4Cs, (e) US Air Force MC-130Es and (f) other specified types of aircraft;

(2) how many low-flying aircraft movements took place in low-flying area 14 in each year since 1979;

(3) how many low-flying aircraft movements took place in low-flying area 14 (T) in each year since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: It is not our practice to publish detailed information about activity in specific low-flying areas. However, the Highlands of Scotland currently experience only a small percentage of the total low-flying activity in the United Kingdom, in comparison with its overall size as a proportion of the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the areas in the United Kingdom where instrument low flying using terrain-following radar is permitted.

Mr. Neubert: At present instrument low flying using terrain-following radar is only permitted in the Highlands restricted area.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence between which hours, and on which days of the week, low flying using terrain-following radar is normally permitted in the highlands restricted area; and if such flying has every been authorised outside those hours.

Mr. Neubert: Low flying using terrain-following radar is only permitted in the Highlands restricted area between the hours of 1500 and 2300 Mondays to Thursdays, Scottish public holidays excepted. I am not aware of any such flying having ever been authorised to take place outside these hours.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to ensure that foreign military pilots have read and understood the relevant sections of joint services publication 318 and the United Kingdom military low flying handbook prior to being authorised to fly in the United Kingdom low flying system.

Mr. Neubert: Permission for foreign military pilots to fly in the United Kingdom low flying system is conditional on their receiving a comprehensive face to face briefing by a qualified British Forces or USAF officer. This briefing would cover, inter alia, relevant sections of joint services publication 318 and the United Kingdom military low flying handbook.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many local public meetings to explain the reasons for military low flying have been held in Scotland by his Department since 1979; and if he will list the location and date of each such meeting.

Mr. Neubert: According to available records, the Minister of Defence has held the following public meetings on low flying in Scotland since 1979:

Location	Date
Inverurie, Grampian	12 January 1980
Newton Stewart, Strathclyde	8 July 1980
Dingwall, Highland	18 May 1982
Ullapool, Highland	19 May 1982
Tain, Highland	20 May 1982
Jedburgh, Borders	5 June 1985
Kelso, Borders	6 June 1985
Duns, Borders	6 June 1985
Galashiels, Borders	30 June 1987
Perth, Tayside	15 June 1988

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from members of the public about the effect of low flying in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neubert: Between 1 October and 30 November 1988 the Ministry of Defence received 744 inquiries or complaints about military low-flying training in the United Kingdom.

US Military Personnel

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations in Scotland other than Thurso, Mormond Hill, Edzell, Prestwick, Machrihanish, Holy Loch and Glen Douglas where United States military personnel were assigned in each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no other locations in Scotland, other than those referred to by the hon. Member, to which United States military personnel have been assigned since 1979.

Aircraft (Noise)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken to introduce a formal requirement for quieter engines to power military aircraft.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 December 1988]: The possibility of noise reduction is one of a number of aspects taken into account in the Ministry of Defence consideration of requirements for new military aircraft engines.

Export Services

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the achievements of the Defence Export Services organisation in 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: This year DESO has again made a valuable contribution to the increasing success of British defence companies in the defence export market. The defence White Paper when it is published will as usual give more details.

Chieftain Tank

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the Chieftain tank replacement.

Mr. Sainsbury: There have been numerous representations from right hon. and hon. Members, industry and members of the public about the choice of a Chieftain tank replacement.

Defence Procurement Contracts

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total amount saved by cost reductions on defence procurement contracts let on a competitive basis since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) on 1 December 1988 at column 352. However, I should like to draw attention to an error in this answer; in line 11 it reads "competition can be used to make it impossible",

it should read

"competition can be used, make it impossible".

War Stocks

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the level of Royal Navy war stocks in each year since 1979, expressed as a proportion of (a) national targets, and (b) agreed NATO force goals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information on precise levels of war stocks is classified. Since 1979, Royal Navy stockholdings have, in general, been maintained at a level which meets both national and NATO requirements.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the level of Royal Air Force war stocks in each year since 1979, expressed as a proportion of (a) national targets and (b) agreed NATO force goals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information on the precise levels of war stocks is classified. Since 1979, Air Force stockholdings have increased considerably and generally continue to meet both national and NATO requirements.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the level of Army war stocks in each year since 1979, expressed as a proportion of (a) national targets, and (b) agreed NATO force goals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information on the precise levels of war stocks is classified. Since 1979, Army stockholdings have increased considerably and have been maintained at levels which mainly meet both national and NATO requirements.

RAF Fast Jets

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what recent trends have been observed in accident rates to Royal Air Force fast jet aircraft operating at low level; and what assessment has been made of the reasons for these trends;

(2) what recent trends have been observed in accident rates to Royal Air Force fast jet aircraft; and what assessment has been made of the reasons for these trends.

Mr. Neubert: The major accident rates (1971-87) for Royal Air Force aircraft and for RAF fast jet aircraft were set out in columns 336-38 of the Official Report on 18 April 1988. Both have fallen over the years, reflecting the professionalism of the aircrew and support personnel of the RAF as well as the continuous improvements in aircraft performance. Time spent at low level is not recorded precisely: it is not, therefore, possible to state the major accident rate for fast jets operating at low level. However, since 1979 such accidents account for some 32 per cent. of the total suffered by the RAF. This is compatible with the increased proportion of low-level flying training undertaken by the RAF since 1979.

BAOR (Artillery Regiment)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether plans exist to restore the number of nuclear artillery regiments in the British Army of the Rhine to five.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The four BAOR artillery regiments currently equipped with the 105mm Abbot gun will be equipped in due course with a nuclear capable 155mm howitzer which could be deployed in a nuclear role. This change will not, however, lead to any increase in United Kingdom-assigned nuclear shell stocks in Europe.

RAF Machrihanish (P-3C Aircraft)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made to provision for logistics, weapons and spares support for Royal Netherlands Navy P-3C aircraft at RAF Machrihanish in the past four years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to discuss details of any such arrangements.

US Chemical Warfare Stockpiles

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information has been provided to Her Majesty's Government by the United States authorities on the size of United States chemical warfare stockpiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It would not be appropriate to comment in detail on the defence capabilities of an ally.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, following the publication of the NRPB report into the incidence of cancers in British nuclear test veterans, he will take action to investigate test veterans' claims of genetic effects and inherited deformity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The findings of the NRPB report give no grounds for investigating the claims by participants in the nuclear test programme that their offspring suffer raised incidence of genetic effects or inherited deformities. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to a similar question on 26 July 1988 at columns 228-30.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will release information relating to the decontamination undertaken to vessels and cargo of the special squadron as part of Operation Hurricane operating under Rear Admiral Torlesse in 1952; if he will give the level and nature of this contamination; and how many personnel were on board HMS Tracker at the time it entered contaminated waters;

(2) where decontamination of HMS Tracker was undertaken, after its contamination in the Pacific; and whether this vessel remained contaminated on entering British waters.

Mr. Sainsbury: The two ships HMS Tracker and HMS Zeebrugge, which experienced low depositions of radioactive material during the Hurricane operation, primarily from fission products, at levels not significant to health, were subject to first stage decontamination and temporary fixative treatment at sea at the scene of the test. Further decontamination and stripping of fixative from the ships and items of cargo was conducted on return to Naval Ports in the United Kingdom. In this operation full decontamination was completed to levels at which no further treatment or precautions were necessary. With its crew and complement of scientists and other visitors, approximately 200 personnel were on board HMS Tracker when she entered mildly contaminated waters during the Hurricane operation. HMS Tracker did not take part in the tests conducted in the Pacific.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will provide information on the effectiveness of film badges and personal dosimeters in detecting the ingestion of particles emitting beta radiation when used by British military personnel during British nuclear tests in the Pacific in the 1950s;

(2) what methods were used to detect levels of beta radiation during British nuclear tests in the Pacific in the 1950s;

(3) how film badges operated as indicators to overall body contamination of all forms of radiation when used by British military personnel during British nuclear tests in the Pacific in the 1950s.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information on the effectiveness of personal film badge dosimeters is readily available in standard textbooks on the measurement of radiation. Their purpose was to assess exposure to ionising radiations by measuring the radiation incident on a piece of photographic film, usually contained in a locket which had a number of "windows" of different thicknesses and filter materials. By examining the film density under these "windows" the health physicist can determine the amount and type of radiation reaching the film, whether it be gamma rays, beta rays or slow neutrons. By definition, it cannot detect radiation form ingested material unless the radiation is capable of penetrating the body and reaching the dosimeter. Nevertheless, by using more sophisticated instruments and detectors to determine the dose from other sources of non-penetrating radiation associated with radioactivity present in the environment, a judgment can be reached as to its contribution to the exposure. Film badge dosimeters can then be used to monitor exposure and allowance made as necessary for the other contributions.

During the United Kingdom test programmes, because strict control was exercised over entry to, and operation within, areas in which surface deposited radioactive material may have been present, uptake and deposition on skin did not lead to doses sensibly above zero.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the film badges issued to British personnel were given to military personnel during British nuclear tests in the Pacific during the 1950s.

Mr. Sainsbury: A full account is given in chapter 3 of the NRPB report of all information on the exposure of participants and of the numbers of service and civilian personnel for whom a record of exposure, or a likelihood of exposure exists. Since, as was explained in the answer to the hon. Member on 31 October at column 529, the exact number of badges issued is not known, I cannot provide him with the information he seeks.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications of the absence of information on the number of film badges issued during British nuclear tests in the Pacific for the accuracy of estimated contamination levels for British military personnel serving in the Pacific during the tests.

Mr. Sainsbury: Lack of information on the precise numbers of film badge dosimeters issued has no implications for the estimated exposures of personnel to ionising radiation. Access to all areas in which the levels of surface deposited radioactive material were such as to require the wearing of film badge dosimeters was strictly controlled and I have no reason to believe that it was not effective (a) in controlling the exposure of personnel to ionising radiation and (b) in ensuring that the uptake of radioactive materials or depositions on skin did not lead to radiation doses sensibly above zero. The accuracy of dose estimation by current or contemporary standards was and remains acceptable for control purposes and for the dose levels experienced throughout the test programme for the few who were exposed.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British military personnel received war pensions following active service on Christmas Island during British nuclear tests there in the 1950s and 1960s.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if coconuts, posted home by British military personnel serving on Christmas Island during the 1950s and 1960s, were checked for radioactive contaminaton on Christmas Island and on arrival in Britain.

Mr. Sainsbury: The extensive environmental monitoring which was conducted throughout the operations in the Pacific showed that none of the indigenous products could be expected to be affected to a significant extent by deposition of surface radioactivity. No monitoring of coconuts or related products (such as Copra) was conducted.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what precautions were taken to monitor indigenous edible vegetation and other foodstuffs for radioactivity, during British nuclear tests on Christmas Island during the 1950s and 1960s.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 7 November 1988 at columns 32-33, which states that fish and sea water were monitored. The bulk of food supplies for service and other personnel were imported to the island and I am not aware that any significant amounts of local produce were used by them. The extensive environmental monitoring which was conducted throughout the operations in the Pacific showed that none of the indigenous products could be expected to be affected to a significant extent by deposition of surface radioactivity.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if water from desalination plants on Christmas Island during British nuclear tests in the 1950s and 1960s used by British or other personnel on the island as a source of drinking water was monitored for radioactivity.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 7 November 1988 at columns 31-32.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the national origin of construction vehicles which were buried and abandoned on Christmas Island after British nuclear tests there.

Mr. Sainsbury: Most of the construction vehicles used on Christmas Island were of British construction, though some vehicles, notably amphibious transport DUKWs, were of United States manufacture. None were buried, but parts of some may have been abandoned or dumped in the sea.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of foodstuffs were buried by the NAAFI following nuclear tests on Christmas Island in the 1950s.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are no records to suggest that surplus food supplies were buried on Christmas Island.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role Fanning Island had during British nuclear tests in the Pacific during the 1950s.

Mr. Sainsbury: At the time of the tests, Fanning Island was an important communications point and continued in the same role beyond the date when the test programme was completed.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether, on the date of the test for Grapple Y, Mr. Andrew Dickson of Wakefield was among British personnel who were moved nearer to the test site; on how many occasions similar such movements occurred; and how many personnel were involved;

(2) how checks were made to ascertain that service personnel were at a safe location during the Grapple Y test in 1958;

(3) where Mr. Andrew Dickson, service number 22999369, serving with the 12th Independent Field Squadron, Royal Engineers, was located on the date and time of the Grapple Y test on 28 April 1958;

(4) what are the implications for the Ministry's ability to assure ex-Service men on Christmas Island in 1958 that they did not receive a dose of radiation of its inability to ascertain where each individual was at the time of a particular detonation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 31 October 1988 at column 529 referring to the location of named individuals and to the closest distances at which personnel were located during each of the tests in the Pacific area. I have no information on the precise movements or whereabouts of Mr. Andrew Dickson except to state that he was at a safe location. The means by which the checks to ascertain that all personnel, service and civilian (including the local population) were at a safe location were to conduct a full roll call of all personnel know to be present. The countdown sequence to the firing could not continue until it was established that all personnel were at a safe location. The records which have been kept do not now permit the identification of each individual at the time of each detonation. Nevertheless I am confident that the roll call checks were conducted scrupulously and therefore that all personnel were at safe locations at the time of each detonation.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present status of the 12th Independent Field Squadron Royal Engineers; and what was its major function during British nuclear tests in the 1950s.

Mr. Sainsbury: The 12th Independent Field Squadron (now known as 12 Field Squadron) is part of 25 Engineer Regiment stationed at Osnabruck, Germany. At the time of the tests its major function was building, construction and related works.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the members of the 12th Independent Field Squadron Royal Engineers who served in British nuclear tests in the 1950s and are still alive.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have no information specific to the present vital status of members of the 12th Independent Field Squadron who served at Christmas Island. The NRPB study includes members of the squadron among the participants.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why members of the 12th Independent Field Squadron Royal Engineers, previously serving on Christmas Island during British nuclear tests, were later involved in a series of experiments conducted at Porton Down; and what was the nature of these experiments.

Mr. Sainsbury: The nature of the duties involved were, to the best of my knowledge, not such as to warrant their being described as involvement in a series of experiments.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how mortality amongst British nuclear test veterans is identified from general mortality; who has overall responsibility for this investigative procedure; and how the records are collated;

(2) what was the annual level of mortality amongst British military personnel serving on Christmas Island, during British nuclear tests undertaken in the 1950s and 1960s; and what were the causes of these mortality levels.

Mr. Sainsbury: The NRPB together with its consultants from ICRF, Professor Sir Richard Doll and Dr. Sarah Darby, were responsible for analysing the mortality data on participants and a full account of the causes analysed is given in the NRPB report. As for the annual level of mortality in the 1950s and 1960s, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 31 October 1988 at column 529, where he asked for similar information for each year since 1958. The sources of mortality records are described in the NRPB report. The bulk of them came from National Health Service (NHS) and Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) central records, but for those not traced in this way further searches were undertaken.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will release information as to how safe distances were calculated when positioning British military personnel, during British nuclear tests in the Pacific in the 1950s;

(2) if he will release the information which led to the calculation of safe distances, beyond which the wearing of film badges was deemed unnecessary, for the Grapple Y test in 1958.

Mr. Sainsbury: The means by which it was established that the locations where personnel were situated at the time of each test were safe were based on standard methods described in textbooks such as "The Effects of Nuclear Weapons" published by United States Department of Defence and United States Department of Energy. These calculations took into account the expected maximum yield and altitude and the effect of the intervening air. These yields for the tests in the Pacific were within range given in answer to a question from the hon. Member on 31 October 1988 at columns 523-26.

Since the wearing of film badges was not a means of checking the exposure at these locations, they were not necessary for this purpose during any of the tests, including Grapple Y in 1958. What they were provided for was primarily to measure the exposure of personnel who might have access to areas where the radiation levels were high after the detonation.

Trident

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the financial implications to the Trident programme following the delays incurred by the sonar suite component of the tactical weapon system.

Mr. Sainsbury: There has been no increase in the budget for the Trident tactical weapon system associated with reported delays to the sonar suite.

NATO (40th Anniversary)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his department has for celebrating the 40th anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence is marking the 40th anniversary of NATO in a variety of ways. The following events are planned:

1. an exhibition which will open in London and then tour a number of major centres throughout the country;
2. a flag-raising ceremony at Northwood;
3. a NATO item is proposed for the Royal Tournament;
4. a NATO postmark which will be used by the Post Office for two weeks from 28 March 1989.

Aldermaston (Landscaping)

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of landscaping undertaken at the atomic energy research establishment Aldermaston during 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: During 1988 no landscaping work was carried out at AWE Aldermaston. However, some £61,000 has been spent to date in the current financial year on grass cutting and grounds maintenance.

Research and Development

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the planned target level for defence research and development spending, in terms of (a) expenditure and (b) proportion of gross domestic product over the next three years.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is expected that defence expenditure on research and development will be £2,272 million in 1988-89. This is approximately 0·5 per cent. of GDP for that year, as estimated in the Autumn Statement. For expenditure in subsquent years to 1990-91 would refer the hon. Member to the statistical series in the "Annual Review of Government funded Research and Development for 1988." Table 2b to page 65, is however based on a somewhat different definition of R and D.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are being introduced to encourage commercial military research and development to supplement Government spending in this area.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry continues to pay very close attention to the level of public expenditure on defence research and development and our commercial approach to defence procurement encourages companies to invest their own money in R and D in order to remain competitive. In addition, we are developing a closer alignment with industry so that it understands our anticipated future requirements and where best to commit its own R and D resources. We also encourage industry to consider the defence export and civil potential of both commercial and MOD-funded R and D.

Damage Compensation

Mr. Macdonald: The ask the Secretary of State for Defence, (1) what agreements or understandings exist between the United Kingdom and (i) Holland and (ii) West Germany to compensate for damage caused by British armed forces to the private property of citizens of these countries on or in their respective territorial waters, airspace and land area; (2) what agreements or understandings exist between the United Kingdom and other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation member states for compensation for damage caused by the armed forces of the latter to the private property of British citizens in or on British territorial waters, airspace or land area.

Mr. Neubert: I will write to the hon. Member.

Shootings (Gibraltar)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which officials of his Department were involved in press briefings given to journalists researching the SAS shooting in Gibraltar; and on what dates such briefings were given.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Defence public relations staff at all levels dealt with inquiries from journalists researching the Gibraltar shootings on many occasions from 6 March. In responding to these inquiries press officers drew on the Foreign Secretary's statement to the House of Commons 7 March 1988.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which officials of his Department met representatives from Thames Television to discuss the programme "Death on the Rock"; and on what dates.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The chief of public relations and the director of public relations (Army) met one representative from Thames TV on 21 April 1988.

Exercises

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of providing transportation and accommodation facilities for the observers invited to attend Exercise Keystone in October 1987 under the terms of the Stockholm conference on disarmament in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cost to the United Kingdom was some £16,000. Exercise Keystone was held in the Federal Republic of Germany, and under the terms of the 1986 Stockholm document the cost of transporting the observers from their point of arrival in the country to their accommodation was met by the Federal Republic.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of providing transportation and accommodation facilities for the foreign observers invited to attend Exercise Purple Warrior in November 1987 under the terms of the Stockholm conference on disarmament.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cost to the United Kingdom was some £21,000.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Warsaw pact exercises British military personnel have observed at the invitation of Warsaw pact countries; and what was the cost of sending observers to these exercises.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Thirty British military personnel have observed 15 exercises at the invitation of Warsaw pact countries under the terms of the 1986 Stockholm document, at a cost to the United Kingdom of some £4,500.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of sending British military observers to the Soviet exercise in the German Democratic Republic in September 1987; whether those observers found that the exercise was not in breach of the agreement on confidence and security building measures reached at the Stockholm conference on disarmament in Europe in September 1986; and whether they reported difficulties with the arrangements for their inspection.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cost of sending a British military inspection team to the Soviet exercise in the German Democratic Republic in September 1987 was some £12,000. The British inspection team was satisfied that the exercise was not in breach of the agreement on confidence and security building measures reached at the Stockholm conference on disarmament in Europe in September 1986. Some minor technical problems excepted, they reported no difficulties with the arrangements for their inspection.

Theatre Nuclear Forces

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the theatre nuclear force restructuring options currently being considered by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation include the deployment of additional United States air force aircraft that are capable of being armed with strategic air-launched cruise missiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Nuclear Weapons (Malta Visit)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the deployment of nuclear weapons on board

Royal Navy ships was discussed in any of his communications with the Maltese Government prior to the visit to Malta of a Royal Navy detachment in June;

(2) whether any undertakings were given to the Maltese Government regarding the deployment of nuclear weapons on board Royal Navy vessels prior to the visit to Malta of a Royal Navy detachment in June.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the invariable policy of successive British Governments neither to confirm nor to deny the presence of nuclear weapons in individual HM ships and no undertakings on this matter were given to the Maltese Government.

BNFL (Audit)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 15 December, whether he will state the number of written communications received by the Ministry of Defence from the British Nuclear Fuels plc team carrying out the programme audit at Aldermaston and Burghfield; and on what dates they were received.

Mr. Sainsbury: One, which was received on 15 November 1985.

Procurement Division

Mr. O'Neil: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the responsibilities of the investigating officers employed by the procurement division of his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: The PE does not employ investigating officers as such. However, the Procurement Executive of my Department employs qualified accountants and technical cost estimators, whose principal tasks are to assist and advise in the pricing and post-costing of non-competitive contracts.

European Defence Contractors

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has had any consultations with (a) Plessey, (b) GEC-Marconi, (c) British Aerospace or (d) Ferranti regarding the development of closer links between European defence contractors.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry has frequent informal discussions with United Kingdom industry on a wide range of topics, including links between defence contractors. Such links are also discussed within the independent European programme group and with the European defence industry group. Consultations between the Ministry and individual companies on matters of comercial sensitivity are treated as confidential.

Crown Servants (Names)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to request all his grade 2 Crown servants and above to give their permission for their names to be revealed on a confidential basis to the Select Committee on Defence, it they apply for permission to accept an outside appointment.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Select Committee asked to be provided with information of this nature in its ninth report in the Session 1987-88. The Government expect to publish their response to that report early in the new year.

Blue Vixen Radar Programme

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the delays incurred in the Blue Vixen radar development programme since his answer to the hon. Member for Harrow, East of 26 January, Official Report, column 190; and if these delays will affect the in-service date of the Sea Harrier for the designated Royal Navy squadrons.

Mr. Sainsbury: A delay of some three months occurred earlier this year in the commissioning of the Blue Vixen 'A' model radar in the trials aircraft. This will delay the in-service date by about two months.

Plessey (GEC Bid)

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications for competition in defence procurement of GEC's proposed bid for the Plessey company.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MOD is examining the implications for competition in defence procurement of the proposed bid by GEC and Siemens for the Plessey company, and I have no comment to make at this stage.

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representation has been made to his Department by GEC in connection with their proposed bid for the Plessey company.

Mr. Sainsbury: In examining the defence procurement implications for the proposed bid by GEC and Siemens for the Plessey company, we would, of course, listen to any representations from the parties involved. Any such discussions would be confidential to the parties concerned.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to ensure that the independence of Plessey's defence operations will be effectively preserved under GEC/Siemens bid plans.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MOD is considering all aspects of the proposed bid by GEC and Siemens for the Plessey company, and I have no comment to make at this stage.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence is available to his Department about the amount of chemical warfare agents stockpiled by the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Prior to the Soviet statement on their chemical warfare (CW) stockpile made in December 1987, the only information available to us on the size of their CW capability were estimates based upon sensitive information.

The Soviet Union claims to possess approximately 50,000 tonnes of CW weapons "in terms of toxic agent". The precise scope of its claims is unclear and the figure is substantially lower than our current classified estimates of the size of their stockpile. We have made it clear to the Soviet Union that it will have to give more information if we are to have any confidence in its claim.

Tank Movements (West Germany)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the level of tank movements from Detmold depot near Paderborn in West Germany since November 1987.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) on 19 November 1987 at column 461. The problems associated with the movement of tanks in the Detmold area have been considered in depth by the Detmold garrison Anglo-German co-ordinating committee. As a result it has proved possible to modify the route taken by armoured vehicles to avoid a local school and, where possible, temporary restrictions have been imposed on the movement of tanks at night. A total ban would be unrealistic given the lack of alternative routes and the shortage of daylight during winter months. Movements of armoured vehicles in the Detmold area are controlled by the Detmold garrison commander who notifies the stadt authorities of all such movements. These movements take account of all jointly agreed guidelines and are kept to the minimum level consistent with operational and training requirements.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) in which year plutonium from Calder Hall was first sent to the United States of America under the 1958-59 United States–United Kingdom mutual defence agreement;

(2) in what year plutonium from Chapel Cross was first sent to the United States under the 1958-59 United States–United Kingdom mutual defence agreement;

(3) in what year plutonium from the Central Electricity Generating Board Magnox reactor was first sent to the United States under the 1958-59 United States–United Kingdom mutual defence agreement;

(4) in what year plutonium from the South of Scotland electricity board Magnox reactors was (a) first and (b) last sent to the United States of America under the 1958-59 United States–United Kingdom mutual defence agreement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Details of transfers of nuclear materials under the United States–United Kingdom mutual defence agreement are classified.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any plutonium originating in United Kingdom electricity board Magnox reactors has ever been used in a nuclear test explosion.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Procurement Policy

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy in respect of defence procurement with regard to security of supply and the maintenance of technology and employment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 21 December 1988]: We seek to obtain value for money from our procurement expenditure. We therefore use, wherever practicable, competitive tendering. This policy continues to bring significant benefit to the defence budget and to the taxpayer and has promoted the health and efficiency of the United Kingdom defence industry. Where appropriate we do take into account wider, relevant factors including security of supply and industrial implications.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Imperial Weights and Measures

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what studies he has made of the views of consumers on proposed further restrictions on the use of imperial weights and measures at the point of sale.

Mr. Forth: Under the European Community's 1979 units of measurement directive, the Commission is obliged to make proposals to extend the use of metric units.

The Government are therefore considering United Kingdom policy on metrication. A consultation paper inviting comments on proposals to phase out by the end of 1994 the use of the remaining imperial units for most trade purposes was circulated in October to some 700 organisations representing trade, industry, local authorities and consumers.

The consultation period ended recently and the responses, including those from consumers, are now being studied.

Garsurm Parenide Chip

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about any proposed collaborative programme for garsurm parenide chip development.

Mr. Forth: A national programme of collaborative research in gallium arsenide advanced technology has been supported by the Department of Trade and Industry since early 1987. Research into gallium arsenide analogue integrated circuits (chips) is included in this programme, for which £13 million of support is available.

Inner City Initiatives

Mr. Franks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many business people who attended the action for cities presentations have expressed interest in supporting the Government's inner city initiatives.

Mr. Newton: More than 400 of the firms represented at the seven action for cities working breakfasts held during 1988 expressed an interest in suporting the Government's inner city initiatives.

Manufacturing

Mr. Favell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures he has available for the profitability of manufacturing industry.

Mr. Atkins: In 1987, the net real rate of return at current replacement cost for manufacturing companies was 9 per cent. This exceeds substantially the peak reached in the last economic cycle in 1978 and is the highest since 1969. Information on rates of return on capital employed for manufacturing companies in 1987, derived from the national accounts statistics, was published in "British Business" on 30 September.

Butane Gas Canisters

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take stronger measures to restrict the sale of butane gas canisters to minors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act 1985 provides an adequate legal basis for combatting the problem of solvent abuse. It prohibits the sale of any sniffable product to anyone under the age of 18 who seems likely to want to inhale it for purposes of intoxication. The problem is to make retailers fully aware of the law and to ensure that they obey it. To this end, the Government are funding the distribution of guidance packs to all retailers. We have already helped to pay for a training video for retailers and their staff on how to recognise sniffers and refuse to sell to them. Warning notices for retailers on bulk packs of gas refills are also being introduced.

Fur

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the quantities of fur and fur products imported from North and South Korea for each of the last five years.

Mr. Alan Clark: No imports of fur or fur products have been consigned from North Korea in the period 1983 to 1987. Imports from South Korea were as follows:

	m/tonnes
1983	421
1984	198
1985	50
1986	46
1987	38

Source: Overseas Trade Statistics: SITC R2 Items 212.01-09, 613.0, 848.31.
Notes: Figures exclude headgear and footwear which are not separately identified.
1987 figures provisional.

Industry Council

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will report on the Industry Council held on 13 December.

Mr. Newton: The Council considered three items concerning the Community steel industry. First it agreed to the extension for a further three-year period from 1 January 1989 of the present strict rules governing the payment of state aid to European Coal and Steel Community steel producers.

Secondly, the Council reached provisional agreement, subject to the lifting of reserves by two member states, on a compromise solution to the Italian Government's request for Council agreement to its restructuring plan for the Italian public sector steel industry. The compromise would enable the Italian Government to grant only two thirds of the aid for which they had requested authority, in exchange for carrying out all the capacity closures foreseen in the restructuring plan. Discussion of the need for the balance of the aid would be postponed until September 1990, unless there were a rapid downturn in the steel market before then. The Council would take a decision on further Italian capacity closures at the same time. It was agreed that this item should be considered further at the 21 December Internal Market Council.

Thirdly, the Council also discuss social aid for steelworkers, but was unable to reach agreement with the European Commission on the means of funding such measures.

There was also discussion of a Commission proposal for expansion of the EuroInfoCentre network. The Greek presidency also suggested that the Council make a declaration on the Community's policy towards small and medium sized enterprises; it was agreed that this matter should be deferred for discussion in the Council's working groups.

There was also discussion of a Commission report on the Community's textile industry and a statement by the Greek presidency on the Community's mining industry.

Enterprise Initiatives

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will arrange for standardisation of all procedures and paper work issued by the agencies administering enterprise initiatives; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the various procedures and documentation required by agencies administering enterprise initiatives.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 December 1988]: The scheme contractors responsible for administering the assisted consultancy schemes under the enterprise initiative are:

Initiative
The marketing initiative	The Institute of Marketing (through four sub-contractors)
The manufacturing systems initiative	Production Engineering Research Association (PERA)
The quality initiative	PERA (except in the North West which is covered by Salford University Business Services Ltd.)
The design initiative	The Design Council
The business planning initiative	3i Enterprise Support Ltd. (3iES)
The financial and information systems initiative	3iES

The functions of the contractors are carried out in a comparable way, subject to local operational flexibility. These functions are to maintain lists of suitable consultants in their respective areas of expertise, to match the needs of applicants (as identified by a DTI enterprise counsellor) with an appropriately qualified consultant, to assess consultants' reports, and to pay them the part of the fee due from DTI.

As regards the listing of consultants, the same approach is required of all scheme contractors. Each consultancy practice must either have had at least two years' experience as an independent consultancy practice, or one year's experience as an independent practice, plus five previous and consecutive years' relevant consultancy experience by the principals with another practice. In addition, a practice should be able to cite evidence of satisfaction by clients in respect of four assignments.

My Department monitors the performance of the scheme contractors closely and is concerned to ensure that a standard, high-quality service is delivered. It stands ready to investigate evidence of difficulties experienced by applicant firms or consultancy practices.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to obtain from the Swedish Government the full text of the report handed to the Swedish ambassador by the USSR in 1957 of the alleged death of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have the full text of the report given to the Swedish Government by the Soviet Government in 1957 about the fate of Raoul Wallenberg. The report claims that Mr. Wallenberg died in prison in 1947 of natural causes. We have pressed the Soviet Government to give a more detailed account of Mr. Wallenberg's fate, but they have consistently declined to add to the substance of the 1957 report.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to obtain from the Swedish Government as much information as is in their possession about the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We already have the limited information available to the Swedish Government on what befell Mr. Raoul Wallenberg. We have repeatedly pressed the Soviet authorities for a full account of Mr. Wallenberg's fate both bilaterally and in the CSCE.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions when he discussed the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg with the Governments of (a) Sweden, (b) Israel and (c) the United States of America since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have discussed this case with Sweden regularly, most recently at the beginning of this year. We also keep in touch regularly with the United States Government, most recently when we both raised the issue in Vienna last month. We have not formally discussed the case with Israel in recent years as far as I can ascertain.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has requested the United States Government to raise the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg with the Soviet Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Such a request would be primarily a matter for the Swedish Government. We do keep in regular touch with the United States authorities about this case and know that the United States Government have raised it with the Soviet Government.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has requested the Swedish Government to raise the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg with the Soviet Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Swedish Government naturally take the lead in efforts to establish Mr. Wallenberg's fate and already regularly raise his case with the Soviet authorities.

Vietnamese Refugees

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the possible convening of an international conference on the resettlement of Vietnamese refugees now in Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: The ASEAN countries have proposed the convening of an international conference in 1989 to address the general problem of boat people and Indo-Chinese refugees in south-east Asia. We support this idea and would attend any such conference.

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese refugees arrived in Hong Kong in 1988; and how many have been resettled elsewhere.

Mr. Eggar: As at 20 December, 17,984 Vietnamese boat people had arrived in Hong Kong this year. Of these, 8,035 have so far been granted refugee status. A total of 2,745 refugees have been resettled elsewhere.

Colombia

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Colombia regarding political killings and disappearances in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The human rights situation in Colombia is disturbing, and reflects an appalling level of violence in the country. The Colombian Government are deeply concerned and acknowledge that the problem is very serious. Political violence emanates from a range of sources—Right-wing death squads and Left-wing guerrillas as well as drugs traffickers. But I am not aware of any evidence that the Colombian Government are involved. I raised our concerns about human rights with President Barco and with Ministers during my visit to Colombia in August; and our embassy continues to do so.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any assessment has been made of the cost of verifying (a) a worldwide chemcial weapons ban and (b) a North Atlantic Treaty Organisation/Warsaw Pact chemical weapons ban.

Mr. Waldegrave: We remain committed to negotiating a global, effectively verifiable ban on CW, but until the verification regime has been further elaborated, it is not possible to make detailed estimates of the verification costs of any CW convention. A British Government paper presented to the conference on disarmament last year (Making the Chemical Weapons Ban Effective: CD 769) expressed the view that the costs of implementing a global CW convention were unlikely to be less than for the current IAEA budget.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Act 1944

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to be able to reply to the points raised by Mr. C. J. M. McGovern and colleagues in their letter of 6 June concerning section 68 of the Education Act 1944.

Mr. Butcher: I regret that the Department is unable to trace Mr. McGovern's letter. If he will write again I will ensure that he receives an early reply.

Small School, Red House, Norwich

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library copies of all reports on the Small School at Red House, Norwich under the 1944 and 1981 Education Acts.

Mr. Butcher: The latest visit to the school was by Her Majesty's inspector of schools in November. His task was to consider the school's eligibility for final registration under the Education Act 1944 and advise on the timing of an application for approval under the Education Act 1981 as a school suitable for the admission of children with statements of special educational needs.

Copies of Her Majesty's inspector's full inspection reports are sent as a matter of course to the Library. No full inspection reports have been made on this school.

Free School Meals

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing the cost of free school meals in each year from 1978-79 to 1990-91 in both cash and real terms.

Mr. Butcher: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. The estimated figures contained in the table are based on the number of meals served to pupils on one day in each of the relevant years. More detailed statistics are included in the annual school meals census which is available in the Library of the House of Commons. Information for 1987-88 to 1990-91 is not yet available.

Education Costs (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is spent on a per capita basis for each child in primary and secondary education in (a) the maintained sector and (b) the voluntary sector of schools administered by Liverpool education authority.

Mr. Butcher: The average net institutional expenditure in Liverpool education authority in 1986-87 was £980 per pupil in primary schools and £1,445 per pupil in secondary schools. No separate information is available for voluntary schools.

Top-up Loan Scheme

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the net cost of the top-up loan scheme to the Government in each of the first five years; and what will be the gross cost to the loan provider in each of the first five years.

Mr. Jackson: Estimates of these costs are set out in annex E of the White Paper, "Top-up Loans for Students".

School Governors

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, where employees take off time for duties as school governors under the terms of the Employment Protection Consolidation Act 1978, he will require employers or local education authorities to remunerate governors in lieu of moneys deducted from their salary.

Mrs. Rumbold: School governors are entitled to reasonable time off from their employment to fulfil public duties. We welcome the fact that many employers arrange time off with pay for governors, but we believe that this is a matter best resolved between employer and employee.

Under section 58 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, a local education authority may, in accordance with the provision of a scheme made by it, pay travelling and subsistence allowances to governors.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes to announced the 1989-90 capital allocations for local education authorities in England.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) on 21 December.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will announced his allocations for education capital expenditure for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) on 21 December.

Primary Headteachers (Retirement)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many primary headteachers have taken early retirement for each year since 1985 in the following age ranges (a) under 50 years, (b) 50 to 54 years and (c) 55 to 59 years; and how many of these have been as the result of ill health.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 6 December 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

WALES

Correspondence

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now reply to the urgent matter raised in a letter to him by the hon. Member for Gower, dated 16 December, regarding the public inquiry currently taking place at the Guildhall, Swansea.

Mr. Peter Walker: I will be replying shortly to the letter.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Identity Cards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether his Department has investigated, or is currently studying, the usefulness of a national identity card to his departmental responsibilities; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 15 December at column 1080.

Social Security Act 1986

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what aspects of the operation of the Social Security Act 1986 his Department has recently reviewed.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend reviews annually the level of all benefits as required under the 1986 Act. We have recently announced that extra help will be directed towards less well-off pensioners at a cost of £200 million.

Male Retirement

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans his Department has for lowering the adult male retirement age to bring it into line with women's retirement age.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Pension age is one of the issues discussed in the European Community's equal treatment directive. The question of changing the age of retirement is being considered in the context of this directive.

Child Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans exist to replace the existing child benefit payments with a tax allowance for children.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what date he plans to implement (a) section 1, (b) section 2 and (c) section 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if his Department has undertaken any studies on the implementation of section 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Each section of the Act will be implemented as and when the necessary resources can be identified and made available. We are making good progress on implementation, with six key sections now in force. We have agreed with the local authority associations that section 7 is the next priority, and detailed work on sections 1, 2 and 3 will follow as soon as possible.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to extend section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 to include information relating to the development of community care services for people with physical and sensory disabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Section 11 of the Act requires that an annual report be laid before Parliament containing information about the development of health and social services in the community for people with mental illness or mental handicap, and about the numbers of such people who are receiving treatment in hospital. We accepted the need to include this particular provision when the Bill was going through Parliament, but are not convinced that a similar need arises for other types of disability.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department is taking to monitor the implementation of (a) section 5, (b) section 6 and (c) section 9 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Department's social services inspectorate is engaged in several exercises to monitor those sections of the Act which have already been implemented. Reports will be available during 1989.

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of Stae for Social Security when he expects information on the number of people receiving the severe disability premium to be available

Mr. Scott: Estimates of the number of people receiving the severe disability premium will be available with the publication of the May 1988 annual statistical inquiry in the summer of 1989.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what procedures he has in place to monitor take-up of the severe disability premium.

Mr. Scott: All who are in receipt of income support and are eligible for the severe disability premium receive it automatically. It is estimated that about 7,000 claimants will receive the premium. Because the number entitled is small, no reliable statistical information will be available on which to monitor take-up.

Claimants

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what precise criteria he plans to adopt for unemployed claimants to meet a requirement that they are actively seeking work in order that they can obtain benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Claimants will need to take all apropriate steps to find work. These might include answering newspaper advertisements, registering with employment agencies and contacting employers. The independent adjudicating authorities will determine each case on its merits taking account of factors such as the local labour market, the claimant's capabilities and his work experience.

Fuel Charges (Deductions)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households, at the most recent date for which figures are available, were having weekly deductions made from their supplementary benefit/income support for (i) electricity and (ii) gas (a) of under £2 per week and (b) in each £1 band above £2 per week up to £30 per week.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest figures available show that in May 1987 supplementary benefit recipients were having deductions made from their weekly benefit for electricity and gas as follows:

Band £	Electricity	Gas
0·01– 2·00	4,282	2,538
2·01– 3·00	6,889	2,054
3·01– 4·00	9,937	6,312
4·01– 5·00	13,522	7,488
5·01– 6·00	13,972	13,155
6·01– 7·00	16,603	14,893
7·01– 8·00	16,785	15,293
8·01– 9·00	13,852	17,065
9·01–10·00	11,631	17,419
10·01–11·00	10,077	11,938
11·01–12·00	8,822	9,787
12·01 and over	36,588	20,340

Information is not readily available for separate £1 bands over £12·01 per week.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the numbers of gainers and losers in structural terms from the introduction of the Social Security Act 1988 as in "The Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits" broken down for Scotland, Wales, England and Northern Ireland.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish tables of the number of retirement pensioners living within South Shields who were (a) financially better off and (b) financially worse off after the introduction of new social security changes in April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Statistically reliable estimates cannot be provided below the national level.

Irish Citizens

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of citizens of the Republic of Ireland currently in receipt of social security benefits in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available. There is freedom of movement between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland and Irish citizens have no conditions attached to their stay in the United Kingdom.

Retirement Pensioners

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many retirement pensioners in South Shields are in receipt of housing benefit transitional payments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available. However, once the majority of applications have been processed the transitional payments unit will be able to give details of the number of recipients in certain groups within the area of individual local authorities but not by individual constituencies.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of retirement pensioners in South Shields who were in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit for the three months prior to April and (b) income support for the period April to July.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The constituency of South Shields is covered by the local office at South Shields but the boundaries are not conterminous.

The information for the nearest available dates is as follows:

	Nearest date	Number
Supplementary benefit (people of pensionable age)	17 November 1987	4,864
Income support (people aged 60 and over)	31 May 1988	4,553

The source is a 100 per cent. of cases in action. These figures may, however, overstate the number of people receiving supplementary benefit. The footnote to the reply given to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 12 December 1988, at columns 455-56 refers.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many retirement pensioners in South Shields were in receipt of (a) standard and certificated housing benefit for the three months preceding April, excluding the housing benefit transitional arrangements, and (b) housing benefit for the period between April and July.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Rating Reform

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide an estimate of how much the reduction in the taper from 20 per cent. to 15 per cent. for the community charge will cost.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We estimate that, if the community charge had been fully in place throughout Great Britain during the year 1988-89, the cost of a community charge benefit scheme with a 20 per cent. taper would have been £1,635 million and the cost with a 15 per cent. taper would have been £1,750 million, a difference of £115 million. These estimates are based on the personal allowances and premiums used in the current housing benefit scheme.

Benefits

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish his Department's estimates of the level of public expenditure on the old housing benefit scheme in operation prior to April 1988 in 1988-89 and 1989-90 had the scheme been retained;

(2) if he will publish his Department's estimates of the level of public expenditure on the old family income supplement scheme in operation prior to April 1988 in 1988-89 and 1989-90 had the scheme been retained;

(3) if he will publish his Department's estimates of the level of public expenditure on the old supplementary benefit scheme in operation prior to April 1988 in 1988-89 and 1989-90 had the scheme been retained.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible to state what expenditure would have been had the former benefits remained in place. There have been many changes in economic conditions and in public knowledge of benefits. Expenditure would also have depended on decisions about uprating the old schemes.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many supplementary benefit single payments were made for each of his Department's local offices in the counties of (a) Cleveland, (b) Cumbria, (c) Durham, (d) Northumberland and (e) Tyne and Wear, for the months of July, August and September, in each year from 1985-86 up to and including 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The information requested is given in the table.

[1] The Annual Period for DHSS was from April to April and statistics were collected four weekly. For each year the total of 4 four weekly periods is given. In 1987 these ended on 28 July, 25 August and 22 September 1987 and corresponding periods are given for each of the other years.

[2] The Department has 33 offices within the five areas mentioned. However, the boundaries of the local offices and those of the county/administrative district are not conterminous.

[3] These are estimated figures. Local industrial action prevented the provision of accurate statistics.

[4] Because of industrial action only a few payments were made.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the extent and quality of training given to his Department's staff involved in processing the claims of people with a mental illness now living in the community, whether he has any plans to extend this training; and what is his policy on involving the voluntary bodies who represent the claimants in such training.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department's Local Office staff who are involved in customer service receive, as an integral part of their initial training, advice and guidance on how to deal efficiently and sympathetically with people suffering from mental illness. There are no plans to extend this initial training as it is considered to be both satisfactory and sufficient.

More detailed and specific training has been provided for social fund officers. They need to appreciate and recognise the significance of disability, the problems arising and the circumstances pertaining to that disability. To this end, 3½ days of an intensive training period is given over to looking at groups of people with difficulties such as the mentally handicapped and mentally ill. Social fund officers discuss the problems of being discharged back into the community and the stigmatising of the mentally ill. They are also given information on the different types of mental illness, e.g. neuroses (anxiety disorders and phobias) and psychoses (depression, manic depression and schizophrenia), to assist them in helping with the claims of these people.

This training is at present the subject of refinement as experience of operating the fund increases.

All the Department's internal training in this area is developed with the advice and guidance of in-house professional resources. This ensures a nationwide consistency of approach which would not be possible if voluntary bodies were to be involved. The logistics of availability of external assistance on the large scale required, would also seem to preclude an alternative approach.

HEALTH

St. Stephen's Hospital, Riverside

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy not to approve any plan for closure of St. Stephen's hospital, Riverside, on a date before 1 June 1989; and if he will consent to the further appointment of junior doctors at the hospital.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook) today.

Riverside Health Authority

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has taken a decision on the proposals submitted to him by the North West Thames regional health authority for the re-configuration of health services in Riverside health authority; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: After due consideration, I have today approved the Westminster and Chelsea Project, a set of proposals put forward by Riverside health authority, and endorsed by the regional health authority. The proposals by Riverside health authority include a scheme to build a new teaching hospital which will provide the most up-to-date facilities to meet the challenge of providing health care for the people of Riverside into the 21st century.

There are additional plans to build five nursing homes and two health centres in the riverside district. The project also proposes the closure of the Westminster, the Westminster Children's, the West London, and St. Mary Abbot's hospitals.

I have written today to the chairman of North West Thames regional health authority with my decision.

Transplants

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) heart, (b) cornea, (c) liver, (d) pancreas, (e) kidney and (f) lung transplants were carried out in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: According to information supplied by the United Kingdom transplant service, the number of transplants performed within the NHS in the United Kingdom is:

[3] Heart and heart/lung and lung. Separate figures are not yet available.

Only a proportion of patients receiving corneal transplants are registered with United Kingdom transplant service, but it is estimated that about 1,500 are performed each year.

Consultants

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next proposes to alter the terms and conditions of employment of consultants.

Mr. Mellor: This is an issue we are keeping under review.

Resources

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state for each English regional health authority the percentage resource difference from its resource allocation working party target for each year since 1983 including an estimate for the current year.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is given in the table.

The range between regional health authorities' resource allocation working party targets has narrowed from 26 per cent. in 1977-78 to 11 per cent. in 1988-89. With the exception of North West Thames and North East Thames all regions are now within 4 per cent. of their target.

Cervical Smears (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current waiting time for cervical smears in the Nottingham district health authority.

Mr. Freeman: As at 1 December 1988 the average time taken for cervical smear tests to be processed after reaching the laboratory was four to five weeks.

Ethnic Minority Groupings

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in numbers and percentage, with 100 per cent. being the total United Kingdom population, of the major ethnic minority groupings in each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is available only for Great Britain,; it is not available for Northern Ireland. The estimates are based on the annual labour force survey which now covers a sample of about 60,000 households each year. The estimates for ethnic minority groups are subject to sampling error consequently, for many purposes, an average of the last three years figures is taken as the best estimate. An article recently published in "Population Trends 54" gives further details.

Salmonella

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date his Department first became aware of the nature of the salmonella problem giving rise to the chief medical officer's statement of 26 August; and if he will list all public warnings or information issued on this subject since 26 August.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 13 April 1988, accumulating evidence on food poisoning associated with salmonella enteritidis phage type 4 was reviewed by my Department and the public health laboratory service.

The following public warnings and information have been issued since 26 August by my Department:

2 September Letter to Chief Environmental Health Officers of local authorites asking them to issue advice locally.

5 September Letter to major catering and hotel organisations with a copy of the 26 August public warning.

21 November Public warning, repeating warning on raw eggs and giving advice about lightly cooked eggs.

5 December Repeat public warning, adding that it was advisable for vulnerable people to avoid eating lightly cooked eggs.

14 December (Jointly with Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food) announcing advertisements to be placed in leading newspapers on 16-18 December.

NHS Property and Land

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to publish annually information on the sales of National Health Service property and land in each district health authority area.

Mr. Freeman: Information on property sales by district health authorities will be available centrally for the first time from about June of next year. Information will then be available on request.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the sales, with sums received by the Trent regional health authority, for the sale of National Health Service properties and land since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is set out in the table. It excludes transactions of less than one acre or of less than £50,000. All proceeds from disposals are retained by health authorities for reinvestment in the Service.

Mentally Ill People, Nottinghamshire

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct the central Nottinghamshire district health authority to provide a list of the moneys payable to it from other health authorities for the provision of services for the mentally ill since 1987.

Mr. Freeman: It is for individual health authorities to plan local services and manage their budgets accordingly and it would be inappropriate for me to intervene in the way suggested. However, I understand that arrangements have been made to facilitate the transfer of patients from Saxondale hospital into central Nottinghamshire. I am sure that if the hon. Member contacts Mr. Teeman, the chairman of the district health authority, he will be able to obtain all available details.

Private Hospice Patients (Drugs)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the present arrangements for all patients in non-National Health Service hospices to obtain necessary drugs under the National Health Service; and whether he has any plans to make present arrangements more effective.

Mr. Mellor: We are aware that some hospices fund current arrangements insufficiently flexible, and the scope for improvements is under consideration.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many medical directors of the 75 independent hospices in England and Wales do not have the right to prescribe drugs and appliances under the National Health Service for patients in their care.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect this information centrally.

Nurses (Regrading)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff from each of the old grades have been assimilated to each of the new grades in the recent clinical grading structure in Oldham district health authority.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is given in the table.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally.

Food Poisoning

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to how many outbreaks of food poisoning were investigated by environmental health departments, and as to in how many cases the source of the outbreak was identified.

Mr. Freeman: Comprehensive information is not held centrally in the form requested. Cases of food poisoning are routinely reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre, which collects, analyses and interprets epidemiological data for those involved in the prevention of communicable deseases including food poisoning.

Food Production Premises (Inspections)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has as to how many food production premises were inspected by local authority environmental health departments in 1986-87; and how many were found to be unsatisfactory;

(2) if he will list by year since 1985 and by authority the number of food inspections carried out by environmental health officers.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally.

Food Handling Training

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce compulsory food handling training for all involved in the processing and retailing of food.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 14 December at column 601.

Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital, Stanmore

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the royal national orthopaedic hospital, Stanmore.

Mr. Mellor: The royal national orthopaedic hospital at Stanmore provides an unrivalled centre of orthopaedic expertise, and we are anxious to safeguard its national role and to ensure that it continues to maintain the standards of excellence for which it is world famous. The hospital draws most of its patients from the area in which it is situated, and so, in order to improve its links with the local community, I have asked the regional health authorities concerned to seek the views of all interested parties with a view to moving the management responsibility for the hospital from Bloomsbury to Harrow.

Elderly People (Deaths)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people over 75 years died in each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to the reply, 2 December 1988, c. 441-42]: I regret that there were errors in the previous reply.

The figures for female deaths for November 1987 should read 15,537 and for January 1988 total deaths should read 30,669.

Day Admissions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each district, region and special health authority the total waiting list for day admissions in March 1988 and September 1987.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 20 December 1988]: The national, regional and combined special health authority waiting list figures for day admissions for September 1987 and March 1988 were published in Department of Health statistical bulletins 2/6/88 and 2/12/88 on 27 April and 26 October 1988 respectively. Copies are in the Library. The figures for district and individual special health authorities have also been placed in the Library.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each region, each district, each special health authority and for the nation as a whole (a) the number of acute beds available for each year from 1979 to 1987 and (b) the number of non-acute beds available from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 25 November 1988]: The information requested has been placed in the Library and I have written to the hon. Member with a copy of such information.

PRIME MINISTER

Rating Reform

Q71. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Prime Minister what information she has as to how many organisations in Scotland are organising means of opposition to the poll tax; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Attempts to organise opposition to the community charge in Scotland are—as we expected—proving to be utterly futile and a waste of time.

Wilmington, Kent

Q86. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Wilmington, Kent.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Denmark

Q103. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Denmark

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

European Commission

Q119. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her communications with President Delors about the portfolio of the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan) to the European Commission.

The Prime Minister: The allocation of portfolios is a matter for the President and the new Commission to decide. I have not had any communication with him on this matter.

Correspondence

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister (1) on how many occasions following requests from the hon. Member for publication in the Official Report, she has refused to publish the texts of letters from herself to hon. Members, between (a) 1979 to 1983, (b) 1983 to 1987 and (c) 1987 to the current date;

(2) pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Brent, East, Official Report, 15 December, column 654, if she will state on what basis publication of the letter to the hon. Member was refused;

(3) what is her policy concerning the publication of exchanges of letters between hon. Members and herself in the Official Report.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the reply which I gave the hon. Gentleman on 15 December 1988 at column 654.

Engagements

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 December.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 December.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 December.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 December.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 December.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 December.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 December.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 December.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRANSPORT

Roads (Cumbria)

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department spent on roads in Cumbria in (a) 1978-79, (b) 1983-84 and (c) 1987-88; and what is the proposed expenditure for the financial years 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We spent £11·9 million in 1983-84 and £10·1 million in 1987-88 on building, improving and maintaining trunk roads and motorways in Cumbria. Figures for 1978-79 are not available by country. Proposed expenditure levels for 1989-90 and 1990-91 have not yet been determined.

We also support expenditure on the county council's more important local roads through the transport supplementary grant system.

Rail Accidents

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the total amount of significant collisions on the railways recorded for the years 1982 and 1987; and what percentage change this represents;

(2) what is the total of significant derailments on the railway recorded for the years 1982 and 1987; and what percentage change it represents.

Mr. Channon: The information requested is available in tables 2 and 3 of the chief inspecting officer of railways' annual report for 1987. There were 54 significant collisions in 1982 and 64 in 1987; an increase of 18·5 per cent. In 1982 there were 129 significant derailments, and 136 in 1987: an increase of 5 per cent.

Comparison of individual years can be misleading because, with the relatively small numbers involved, wide fluctuations from year to year can occur. The number of collisions in 1987 was actually three less than in 1986, the number of derailments three more. A clearer picture can be obtained by comparing the number of accidents in a year with the average over the previous five years. The average number of collisions given in table 2 is 61; and of derailments (table 3), 134.

Other factors can also influence the number of accidents. Because of the railway strike in that year, 1982 is not a good year for comparison. In 1982 the number of train miles (263 million) was 7 per cent. less than in 1987 (283 million). The average for the years 1982 to 1986 was 281 million train miles.

Rail Casualties

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the total casualties killed and major injuries for accidents on British Railways for the years 1982 and 1987; and what percentage change it represents.

Mr. Channon: A breakdown of accident statistics in the form the hon. Member has requested for British Rail as distinct from railways generally is not immediately available. I am having inquiries made as to what further information could be made available. The figures for railways as a whole from 1983 to 1987 are set out in the appendices to the annual report on railway safety during 1987, of which a copy is in the Library. 1982 is not a good year for comparison because there was a railway strike in that year and as a result rail travel was about 8 per cent. lower than normal.

Dearne Towns Link Road

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make additional funding available to the south Yorkshire local authorities of Rotherham, Barnsley and Doncaster to enable them to construct the Dearne towns link road.

Mr. Bottomley: The Dearne towns link road is a local road scheme for which Barnsley and Doncaster metropolitan councils are responsible as local highway authorities. Rotherham borough council is not involved. The normal procedure for a local authority to obtain Government grant aid toward such a scheme is through the transport supplementary grant system. Both authorities have indicated their intention to apply for this grant based on a start of construction in the 1990s.

Barnsley borough council has exceptionally applied to the Secretary of State for 100 per cent. grant under section 272 of the Highways Act 1980 in respect of the new road section of the link, that is, between M1 and Darfield. The application is under consideration.

West London Assessment Study

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of the options listed in the west London assessment study stage 2a report he has instructed Sir William Halcrow and Partners to develop during stage 2b.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have not yet taken any view on the preliminary options produced by the study consultants. This must await the submission of the consultant's report in the summer 1989.

Nuclear Waste (Transport)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how often nuclear waste is transported by train through Kirkstall in west Leeds;

(2) how long trains transporting nuclear waste stop and park in the Kirkstall area of Leeds.

Mr. Portillo: The timing and routing of radioactive consignments are a matter for British Rail. I am informed that irradiated nuclear fuel from power stations would not normally travel via Leeds. All such consignments must comply with the internationally agreed safety requirements.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what emergency plans are in existence and able to be brought into effect in the event of a major accident resulting from the transportation of nuclear waste by rail through Kirkstall in west Leeds.

Mr. Portillo: In the event of an emergency the plans provide for British Rail staff to alert the civil emergency services, which are able to call upon any necessary specialised advice and assistance.

Train Guards

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trains have run in each of the last 10 years without a guard in the guard's van at the rear; and what percentage this is of all trains running in each year.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not held by my Department. The hon. Gentleman should approach the British Railways Board for such details.

Signalmen

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many signalmen in each of the last three years have been working less than (a) 40 hours per week, (b) 40 to 44 hours per week, (c) 45 to 49 hours per week, (d) 50 to 54 hours per week, (e) 55 to 59 hours per week and (f) over 60 hours per week, and what percentage of the total is that in each case.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not held by my Department. The hon. Gentleman should approach the British Railways Board for such details.

Cyprus (Air Routes)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss the possibility of licensing a direct air route from London to Ercan airport, Cyprus.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The Government of the Republic of Cyprus do not authorise flights to Ercan.

Parliamentary Under-Secretary (Correspondence)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the letter sent on 14 December by Commissioner Stanley Clinton Davis to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, about his visit to Strasbourg; what reply is being sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The categories of driver licensing proposed by the European Commission would mean a second test and tougher health standards for non-commercial minibus drivers. This would cause immense problems for community and voluntary organisations. The important groups they serve would suffer as a result.

The visit to Strasbourg at the invitation of United Kingdom community transport operators enabled me to discuss with MEPs of all parties and nationalities the best means of reconciling the key objectives of safety and mobility, particularly for the old and disabled. I advised Commissioner Clinton Davis of this. A copy of the correspondence has been placed in the Library.

The Government's position on this issue is clear. We want to support a modified directive. We want to maintain and enhance mobility for special needs and common interest groups. We want to maintain and enhance safety. We do not want additional driving and medical tests for non-commercial drivers of minibuses.

Tyres

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to prohibit the sale of part-worn remould tyres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no reason to prohibit the sale of part-worn new or remoulded tyres. We are reviewing the Tyres (Safety) Regulations in the light of the recently amended British standard.

Train Cabs (Radios)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss the safety implications of the installation of two-way radios in engine cabs on busy railway routes.

Mr. Portillo: I discuss a variety of matters including safety questions at regular meetings with the BR chairman. BR rolling stock for driver-only operation will be fitted with radios, and BR is currently fitting radios to existing main line locomotives and high-speed trains.

Roads (North-west)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current estimate for roadbuilding work in the north-west during 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect to spend some £90 million this year on building, improving, and maintaining trunk roads and motorways in the north-west. This includes £39 million on the seven major contracts I mentioned when answering my hon. Friend's question of 28 November 1988 at column 425.

We are also supporting expenditure on the region's more important local roads through some £25 million of transport supplementary grant.

British Transport Police

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chief constable of the British transport police; and what was discussed.

Mr. Portillo: In recent days I have met assistant chief constables Palmer and MacGregor and the main subjects have been the Clapham rail crash and the increase in numbers of officers policing the Underground.

Aircraft (Alcohol)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to seek to prohibit the consumption of alcohol on board aircraft within British air space.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Concessionary Fares

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether London Regional Transport has requested his agreement to the imposition of the reserve free travel scheme despite agreement between all London boroughs to continue the present voluntary concessionary fares scheme.

Mr. Portillo: No. There is no requirement for LRT to do so.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in view of the disagreement between London Regional Transport and the London boroughs, he will direct London Regional Transport to continue the existing concessionary fares scheme.

Mr. Portillo: No. The provision of travel concessions in and in the vicinity of London is governed by sections 50 to 53 of the London Regional Transport Act 1984.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under what circumstances London Regional Transport would be able to impose the reserve free travel scheme on the London boroughs.

Mr. Portillo: Section 51 of the London Regional Transport Act 1984 provides that the reserve free travel scheme for London residents will come into effect if immediately before 1 January in any accounting year of London Regional Transport it appears to LRT that there are not in force arrangements, which will apply throughout the following accounting year, for the provision of concessions which satisfy the requirements of section 53 as to scope and uniformity, and for reimbursement by the London boroughs of the cost of those concessions to LRT. In such circumstances LRT is under a statutory duty to implement the reserve scheme.

Bicycle Lights

Mr. Iain Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to tighten the regulations governing the fitment of front and rear lights on bicycles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Front and rear lamps have had to be fitted and used on pedal cycles at night for many years. It is important for cyclists to see and to be seen. We are currently consulting about requiring compliance with a British standard for front lamps. One already applies to rear lamps.

Vehicle Excise Duties

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the current level of excise duties for all categories of vehicles in each of the member states of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Different member states have different tax systems and tax vehicles on different bases. I will write to the hon. Member giving the most recent available information for the United Kingdom and other states.

Roads (Safety Fences)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will approve the use of wire rope safety fences on trunk roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A design of wire rope safety fence that has been demonstrated as fully complying with the current standard for safety fencing has been developed by British Ropes Ltd. Representatives of the Department have witnessed the demonstrations. A detailed specification for the use of this design on trunk roads is being prepared. It is intended to introduce formally this type of fence as soon as practicable, subject to its notification to the European Commission and other member states as required under European law.

Neither this type of safety fence nor the tensioned corrugated bean safety fence currently in use on our roads is designed to contain vehicles heavier than 1·5 tonnes. The main aim is to contain cars—the great majority of vehicles on our roads. Fences designed to retain heavier vehicles might do more damage to cars.

Rail Accident (Clapham)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals British Rail has made to him to replace rolling stock lost in the Clapham accident.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that British Rail intends to order very quickly six additional four-car class 319 units as an extension to the order for 20 units that we authorised this summer. These will replace the six units written off in the Clapham junction accident. The replacement units should be delivered in the course of 1989.

Road Network

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve the rail network, in the light of recent evidence including that from the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders Ltd., that the road network is incapable of holding the projected future volume of traffic.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 20 December 1988]: British Rail is already investing in the railways at the highest rate for 20 years and further increases are planned, but as only 7 per cent. of total passenger kilometres and 13 per cent. of freight tonne kilometres (excluding water and pipelines) are by rail this can have only a limited effect on road traffic.

In view of London's particular problems, we have set up the central London rail study, which is examining ways of relieving congestion in the central areas. I expect to receive the study report shortly.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the United Kingdom airports (a) that have been used since May 1986 and (b) that are currently being used for the transport of gramme samples of plutonium; and with what frequency;

(2) if he will list the United Kingdom airports (a) that have been used since May 1986 and (b) which are currently used for the transport of plutonium in larger than gramme samples;

(3) whether Bournemouth, Hurn, airport is still being used for the transport of plutonium products by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority; what is the total amount of separated plutonium transported through the airport (a) since such operations began and (b) since May 1979; and what proportions of the above constituted shipments of plutonium as (i) plutonium dioxide powder, (ii) plutonium in fresh fuel elements, and (iii) plutonium in other forms.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 15 December 1988]: I understand that the airports used currently and since May 1986 for the transport of gramme samples of plutonium are Manchester and London Heathrow. The United Kingdom airports used currently and since May 1986 for the transport of larger than gramme samples of plutonium are Carlisle, Dounreay, Wick and Bournemouth (Hurn).

I understand that the UKAEA uses Bournemouth (Hurn) airport for the occasional shipment of nuclear materials, including plutonium, for research purposes in support of the civil nuclear power programme. All consignments of radioactive materials are subject to the International Civil Aviation Organisation's technical instructions for the carriage of radioactive materials by air. The Department does not keep statistical information about the nature and quantities of material transported.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the United Kingdom ports which (a) have been used and (b) are currently being used for the transport of separated plutonium as (i) plutonium dioxide powder, (ii) plutonium in fresh fuel elements and (iii) plutonium in other forms.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 15 December 1988]: I understand the United Kingdom ports that have been used to transport separated plutonium are Poole, Liverpool, Southampton, Dover, Hull, Newhaven, Portsmouth, Workington and Scrabster.

The ports currently being used for such transport are Newhaven, Portsmouth, Liverpool (all for samples and specimen fuel pins only), Workington and Scrabster. The Department does not keep statistical information about the nature and quantities of material transported.

THE ARTS

Works of Art

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister for the Arts what action he is taking to ensure that works of art remain in the public domain.

Mr. Luce: Works of art in this country are and will continue to be in both private and public ownership. The management of the collections of public institutions is a matter for their trustees or governing bodies, working within the legislative or other framework which applies in particular cases.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Order

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General (1) how many complaints he has received under section 18 of the Public Order Act 1986; how many such complaints were initiated (a) by the police, (b) by the Commission for Racial Equality, (c) by hon. Members and (d) by members of the public; and how many of these complaints were forwarded to the Crown Prosecution Service for further consideration;

(2) how many complaints he has received under section 19 of the Public Order Act 1986; how many such complaints were initiated by (a) the police, (b) the Commission for Racial Equality, (c) hon. Members and (d) members of the public; and how many of these complaints were forwarded to the Crown Prosecution Service for further action.

The Attorney-General: Since sections 18 and 19 of the Public Order Act 1986 came into force last year, I have received four complaints of alleged offences contrary to section 18 and 26 complaints of alleged offences contrary to section 19, though the circumstances of one of these complaints was such that allegations of both offences were raised at the same time.

It is not uncommon for allegations of offences under section 19, in particular, to be made by more than one complainant, over a period of time. Of the complaints to which I have referred, one came to me initially from the Commission for Racial Equality, four initially from hon. Members and 15 initially from members of the public.

In all but one of those cases, the complaint was referred to the Crown Prosecution Service for further consideration. The single exception was in the case of a complaint manifestly unfounded.

The remaining nine complaints were received by me from the Crown Prosecution Service itself.

3 Camrose Street

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Attorney-General why the Treasury Solicitor has failed to reply to correspondence and telephone calls from Messrs Higginbottom and White, solicitors, of Stockport, in connection with the Department of Transport's purchase of 3 Camrose street, SE2.

The Attorney-General: The Treasury Solicitor replied on 15 December to a letter he had received from Messrs Higginbottom and White dated 6 December. On 19 December a further letter dated 15 December from those solicitors was received by the Treasury Solicitor who is now taking instructions from the Department of Transport to enable him to reply. A telephone call made by Messrs Higginbottom and White to the Treasury Solicitor's Department on 5 December, while the officer concerned with the case was absent on sick leave, was not returned because their letter of 6 December had been received—on 7 December—before the officer was able to return the call.

Patrick Ryan

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Attorney-General whether he now intends to ask the prosecuting authorities in the Republic of Ireland to prosecute Patrick Ryan.

The Attorney-General: I am considering the possible use of the Republic of Ireland's Criminal Law (Jurisdiction) Act 1976. I am in touch with the Irish Attorney-General about the question of the security of witnesses.

Justices (Appointments)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Attorney-General what is the total number of advisory committees on appointment of justices; and if he will make it his policy to list those that have requested that their names are not revealed.

The Attorney-General: There are 95 advisory committees on justices of the peace in the Lord Chancellor's area of responsibility and 17 in the area of responsibility of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. All advisory committees are to make known their membership by the end of 1992. This follows a decision by both Chancellors announced by the Lord Chancellor on 17 June 1988.

Judges and Judicial Officers

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the numbers of paid judges and judicial officers, including masters, registrars and stipendary magistrates; and if he will indicate (a) the total numbers and (b) the number of women within each category of appointment or office.

The Attorney-General: The information requested in respect of paid full-time judicial officers is given in the table.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Child Care

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give consideration to the introduction of tax allowances for child care costs.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

Tax Rates

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what additional revenue would be raised by lifting the top rate of tax to 50 per cent.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The yield in a full year at 1989-90 levels of income of increasing the higher rate of income tax to 50 per cent. would be about £2¼ billion. The estimate includes the consequential effect on the yield of capital gains tax. It is partly based on a projection of the 1986-87 survey of personal incomes and is provisional.

Investment Income

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give total investment income by region for each year from 1979 to 1987 with projections for 1988.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The available information covers tax units with income above the pay-as-you-earn threshold. It relates to years ended 5 April up to 1987: projections to later years are not made for regions. Only the investment income in the records of tax offices is covered in the table: where liability at basic rate is satisfied at source, the tax office may have no record of the income.

Life Offices

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he can make of the gain or loss to the Exchequer if life offices were (a) allowed relief of pension business expenses only against pension business profits, (b) not allowed to escape taxation by setting up foreign life funds, (c) not allowed to create money boxes where surplus funds could be held free of tax, (d) to treat profits from stocklending and underwriting commissions as investment income or gains and (e) to be subject to special rules to ensure that there would be no manipulation of reassurance transactions in order to gain tax advantages; (f) entitled to prompt and regular repayments of all tax credits and tax deducted in respect of their pension business in line with self-administered funds and (g) not liable to stamp duty on life policies and reassurance contracts.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Options for change to the current tax regime for life assurance were outlined in an Inland Revenue consultative document, "The Taxation of Life Assurance", published on 17 June. These options would address in differing ways the issues mentioned by the hon. Member. The cost or yield from change would depend on the option chosen and its detailed implementation, on the timing of change, and on developments in the life assurance industry.

Assuming however that each change mentioned were made in isolation by amendment to the current rules, the following estimates can be made:

a. on recent experience, an Exchequer yield in the range £100 million to £200 million.

b. relief for foreign life funds does not of itself amount to tax evasion. There are however questions about the scope of relief which should be available and the effectiveness of the current rules;

c. a significant yield, but it cannot be quantified without a more precise specification of the measures proposed and any transitional provisions;

d. the yield would vary significantly depending on the level of market activity, but might be around £10 million a year on recent experience;

e. any yield would depend on what special rules were introduced;

f. no direct gain or loss to the Exchequer. Any change in the timing of payments would however have cash-flow effects, particularly in the year of change;

g. a loss of £85 million in 1988-89, before taking account of any offsetting change in corporation tax payments.

Privatisation

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what amount the Civil Service will contract as a result of the Government's present privatisation programme.

Mr. Brooke: The privatisation programme has concentrated upon nationalised industries, rather than Civil Service activities, but some redistribution of Civil Service staff, previously responsible for monitoring such nationalised industries has taken place. This has often been to meet priority demands such as preparing for further privatisations; and additional civil servants have also been required to staff the new regulatory bodies like Oftel—which covers all telecommunications operators (not only privatised British Telecom)—and Ofgas.

This process can be expected to continue, but decisions on privatising Civil Service activities are taken on their individual merits. There is no predetermined programme against which future manpower reductions can be forecast.

Since 1 April 1979, there has been a net saving of just over 300 posts through the privatisation of Civil Service activities, plus just under 19,000 royal ordnance factories and Ministry of Defence posts hived off in 1985 into Royal Ordnance Factories plc (which was subsequently privatised in 1987).

Taxes (Recovery)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government have signed the recent convention drawn up by the Organisation of Economic Co-operation and Development and the Council of Europe, concerning the recovery of personal and corporate taxes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 20 December.

Building Societies (Ballots)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to require building societies to introduce secret ballots for directors.

Mr. Lilley: No.

Flexible Working Hours

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current limit on flexible working hours in (a)

the Department of Trade and Industry, (b) social security offices and (c) the Department of Health; what it has been each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The current limit on flexible working hours in the non-industrial Civil Service is determined by operational need and is subject to the overriding principle that flexibility should be achieved without adverse effect on the overall efficiency of Departments or on service to the public. All non-industrial civil servants are required to complete their conditioned hours within specified periods. Questions about the operation of specific flexible working hours schemes within Departments should be addressed to the appropriate Minister.

Bills (Reprinting)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list of public Bills which were reprinted in each Session since 1983; what was the reason for reprinting each Bill; and what was the cost of reprinting each Bill.

Mr. Lilley: For the information requested on the Bills reprinted during the 1987-88 Session, I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 27 October at columns 369-70. The reasons for reprinting Bills during earlier Sessions are no longer recorded, but a list of such reprinted Bills since 1983 is given in the table.

The cost of reprinting is borne by HMSO and should be covered by income from sales.

National Audit Office

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the seven accounts whose audit has been contracted out by the National Audit Office; to whom those accounts have been contracted out; and what fees are to be paid.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This matter is the responsibility of the Comptroller and Auditor General.

Official Report (Delivery)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of delivering volume 129 of the green-bound Official Report to hon. Members' homes (a) by Securicor delivery and (b) through the Royal Mail.

Mr. Lilley: The rates negotiated by HMSO with Securicor are commercially sensitive but show an appreciable saving over Royal Mail for dispatches such as bound volumes of the Official Report.

Inland Revenue (Reply Envelopes)

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Inland Revenue's policy of withdrawing pre-paid reply envelopes for use by taxpayers; and if he will give the estimated savings to the Exchequer arising from the decision.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 December 1988]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 29 January 1988 to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) at column 420.

Tax Thresholds

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Treasury in a full financial year if tax thresholds were raised in 1989-90 by (a) the rate of inflation, (b) twice the rate of inflation and (c) three times the rate of inflation.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 December 1988]: Direct revenue costs of increasing income tax allowances, the basic rate limit, and the capital gains tax annual exempt amount in accordance with statutory indexation provisions and by multiples of those amounts are in the table. Estimates are mainly based on a projection of the 1986-87 survey of personal incomes and are provisional.

Direct revenue costs of increasing 1988-89 income and capital gains tax thresholds at 1989-90 levels of income and gains

	£ million
Amounts due under indexation	1,750
Twice amounts due under indexation	3,400
Three times amounts due under indexation	5,000

The cost in a full year of increasing the inheritance tax threshold by the same amounts would be (a) £80 million, (b) £150 million and (c) £210 million.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much it would cost to restrict (a) personal tax allowances, (b) age allowance, (c) mortgage interest tax relief and (d) tax relief for occupational and private pensions to the basic rate of tax in (i) 1988-89 and (ii) 1989-90, assuming tax allowances are indexed according to the statutory formula.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 December 1988]: Estimates of the effect on tax liabilities in each case if relief were allowed only at the basic rate of income tax are given in the table. No allowance has been made for possible behavioural effects if allowances and reliefs were restricted to the basic rate.

The estimates are based on projections of the 1986-87 survey of personal incomes and are therefore provisional.

Direct revenue cost of allowances and reliefs in excess of the basic rate, 1988-89 and 1989-90

£ million

	Cost in 1988-89[1]	Cost in 1989-90[1]
Personal allowance	710	810
Age allowance[2]	—	—
Mortgage interest	330	[3] ..
Retirement annuity premiums	80	85
Employee's superannuation contributions	160	180

[1] Estimates for different reliefs are not additive; combined costs would be greater than the sum of the separate components due to the cumulative affect of keeping people out of higher rate tax.
[2] Taxpayers liable to higher rate income tax do not qualify for age allowance. The allowance is withdrawn at the rate of £2 of allowance for every additional £3 of income above the aged income limit (£10,600 for 1988-89, £11,300 for 1989-90).
[3] It would be premature to provide an estimate for 1989-90, since the cost will depend on the amounts of mortgage lending and level of interest rates, as well as on 1989-90 income tax rates and bands.

Mortgage Repayments

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the global increase in mortgage repayments both net and gross since (a) January 1988 and (b) May 1988.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 15 December 1988]: I regret that the information is not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Parole

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average delay in processing parole applications; how many prisoners who were granted parole had their release on parole delayed by the time taken to process their applications in 1987; and by how much the prison population would be reduced if such delays were eliminated.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not available in the exact form requested. In 1987, in about one third of first parole reviews, no decision was reached by a target date designed to allow release on the parole eligibility date. The average delay in these cases was three weeks. Assuming similar delays for subsequent reviews, had all these delays not occurred, the estimated aggregate effect would have been equivalent to a reduction in the average annual prison population of about 400.

Positive Vetting

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total personnel salary cost of staff involved in positive vetting procedures for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Hurd: It is not our practice to disclose information of this nature relating to security procedures.

Prisoners (Mental Health)

Miss Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were mentally ill on the most recent convenient date; and what breakdown of these figures by ethnic grouping is available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 31 March 1988, the most recent date for which information is available, there were 235 inmates held in prison establishments, who, in the opinion of prison medical officers, were suffering from mental disorder of a nature or degree which would satisfy the criteria in the Mental Health Act 1983 for detention in hospital for medical treatment. One hundred and ninety seven of these inmates were mentally ill. There is no available record of the ethnic origin of these prisoners.

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of recorded uses of firearms by police in England and Wales in 1979 and in the latest year available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following table shows the recorded number of uses of firearms by the police for incidents involving criminals or other persons known or believed to be armed.

Year	Number incidents in which shots were fired by police	Number of operations in which firearms were issued to the police
1979	3	8,108
1980	10	7,275
1981	4	6,149
1982	10	7,952
1983[1]	3	3,180
1984	6	2,667
1985	7	2,488
1986	1	2,453
1987	7	2,185

[1] The basis on which the figures are recorded changed in 1983. From 1983 the figures recorded the number of operations in which firearms were issued; the figures for 1982 and earlier years record the number of occasions on which firearms were issued.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total crime clear-up rate for England and Wales broken down by police authority area, in 1979 and the latest year available.

Mr. John Patten: Information for 1987 is given in table 2.18 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1987", column 498, where figures are published annually. Figures for 1979 are given in the table.

Notifiable offences recorded by the police: [1]clear-up rate by police force area

[1] Cleared up by an offender admitting the offence; being charged or cautioned, or no proceedings being taken against known offender.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what was (a) the total number of recorded crimes and (b) the total number of crimes committed against the person in 1979 and the latest year available.

Mr. John Patten: The information for calendar years is published in table 2.1 of "Criminal statistics, England and Wales, 1987", column 498, and for the 12 months to the end of September 1988 in table 4 of Home Office statistical bulletin 36/88.

Coach Traffic (Central London)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the consultation document prepared by the Metropolitan police traffic strategy seminar in April, particularly insofar as it relates to the effect of coach traffic in creating congestion in central London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the Metropolitan police have now received responses to the consultation document which was prepared after the traffic strategy seminar held last April. These will be used to develop a traffic strategy covering, among other things, coach traffic, which will form part of the overall force strategy.

Race Horses (Drugs)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the use of drugs to enhance race horse performance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Action to prevent or detect the misuse of drugs for racehorses is a matter for the Jockey Club, who also have their own procedures for disciplining those who breach their rules of racing. In appropriate circumstances there might be a charge of conspiracy to defraud. The Law Commission, in its working paper number 104, has asked for views on whether gambling swindles involving drugs on animals should be covered by statutory offences. My right hon. Friend will consider its advice in due course.

Firearms

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the dates of implementation of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to publish the draft firearms regulations made under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On the implementation of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988, I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Mr. Bright) on 20 December 1988. Revision of the firearms rules will be necessary in respect of some of the provisions to be brought into force by the second commencement order, later next year. The new rules will come into effect at the same time. Draft guidance to the police on firearms legislation has recently been circulated to a wide range of interested bodies for their comments.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 December to the hon. Member for Stockport, Official Report, column 753, if he will make a statement indicating the basis upon which he is assessing the success of his initiative to reduce the time spent on remand in custody of those remanded from courts in (a) Avon, (b) Somerset, (c) Kent and (d) the west midlands; and as to how he is assessing how the results from each of those areas compare with the rest of England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: After the introduction of statutory custody time limits in these four areas in April 1987, we monitored the level of compliance with the limits. In the first six months, over 95 per cent. of cases were within their limits. Custody limits were extended to a large part of England and all of Wales in April this year and the preliminary results in those areas are similar. Comparable information is not available for areas where time limits are not yet in force.

Prisons

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of people held in prison in England and Wales, both on remand and those serving a sentence, in 1979 and in the latest year available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Average population figures for each of the last 11 years are published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales", copies of which are in the Library. Populations for 1987 will appear in table 1.5 of the latest report (Cm. 547) due to be published 22 December.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when construction of the new psychiatric wing at Holloway prison is planned to begin.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No date for the start of construction work has been fixed.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners do not currently have access to night sanitation; and what is his estimate of what the number will be in the year 2000.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All accommodation at new prisons has access to night sanitation. At existing establishments the number of places now without access to night sanitation is in excess of 20,000 out of a total of about 42,000. It is anticipated that by 1995 75 per cent. of all prison places will have access to sanitation, compared with 43 per cent. in 1979, and that by the end of 1999 the number of places lacking night sanitation will be in the region of 14,000. Trial schemes which might accelerate the introduction of integral sanitation are being evaluated.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are accommodated (a) two to a cell and (b) three to a cell in prison accommodation designed for single occupancy.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 13 November, the latest date for which information is available, 12,210 inmates of prison establishments in England and Wales were held two to a cell and 4,893 were held three to a cell, in cells designed for single occupancy.

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of prisoners who will spend Christmas and new year in police cells; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The number of prisoners in police cells has been in steep decline since the suspension of local industrial action by the POA in October. On 4 October there were 1,917 such prisoners. Yesterday there were 349. By the Christmas weekend, numbers should have fallen still further and we are aiming to achieve a reduction to around 100 by the new year. This reflects a major effort by all concerned and is largely due to the delivery on target of the substantial extra number of prison places which I announced in March.

Asbestos (Gas Masks)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if all the gas masks issued during the 1939-45 war which contained asbestos have been collected and destroyed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Wartime equipment, including gas masks, issued to the public was recalled in 1945. The number of gas masks remaining in private hands is not known but advice has been given from time to time that, because of the potential health hazard from asbestos in the filters, anyone still in possession of a wartime gas mask should contact his local environmental health officer for advice on its safe disposal.

Mr. W. G. Steele

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider his decision not to review the case of Mr. W. G. Steele.

Mr. John Patten: The case has been reviewed on more than one occasion. Neither my right hon. Friend nor his predecessors have found grounds in the representations made to justify referring the case to the Court of Appeal. My right hon. Friend remains ready to reconsider the case, but only if new evidence or other new matters directly pertinent to the conviction are raised with him.

London Underground (Policing)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there are any plans for the Metropolitan police to assume responsibility for the policing of the London Underground; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has agreed to consider how best he could provide Metropolitan police officers to help with the policing of the London Underground while British Transport police recruit and train additional officers to bring London Underground division up from its present strength of 329 to its new complement of 400. Metropolitan police officers will also continue to provide assistance to British Transport police officers on the London Underground when required, but there are at present no plans for the Metropolitan police to assume responsibility for policing the Underground.

Fire Safety

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the guide to means of escape and related fire safety measures in certain existing houses in multiple occupation.

Mr. Hurd: Together with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales, I have today published the guide. It is intended to provide a national advisory standard for means of escape and also contains recommendations on various related fire safety measures, including fire warning systems, fire fighting equipment and fire drills. The guide is designed to aid the process of consultation between housing and fire authorities required by housing legislation and to provide a source of reference for the owners, managers and occupiers of houses in multiple occupation.

I have placed a copy in the Library. It is being issued to fire and local authorities and copies can also be obtained from any of our departments.

Prisons (Needles and Syringes)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many needles or syringes contrary to prison rules have been found in prison establishments in England and Wales during the last three years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 12 December 1988]: Finds of the following numbers of items were reported:

	Needles	Syringes
1985	26	28
1986	27	41
1987	10	34
[1]1988	16	36

[1] Up to 30 June.

Some of the finds of needles and syringes were associated.

Sexual Abuse (Children)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women have been prosecuted for offences involving child pornography, child prostitution or child sexual abuse, respectively, for each of the last five years for which records are available; and how many of those cases involve children who had been reported as missing.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The available information is given in the table. It is not possible from the information held centrally to identify those prosecutions involving children who had been reported as missing.

Persons prosecuted for offences involving child pornography, child prostitution or child sexual abuse

England and Wales Number

	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987

[2] Sexual Offences Act 1956 section 28—persons responsible for girl under 16 causing or encouraging her prostitution.

[3] Includes only those sexual offences where the victim is known to be aged under 16 ie.: buggery or attempted buggery with a boy under the age of 16 or with a woman or an animal, indecent assault on a male or female person aged under 16, unlawful sexual intercourse with a girl under 16, incest with girl under 13, householder permitting unlawful sexual intercourse with girl under 16, abduction of unmarried girl under 16 and gross indecency with children. Excludes sexual offences where the age is not separately available, eg: rape.

ENVIRONMENT

Atmospheric Pollution

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the total annual budget which is specifically allocated by his Department for the investigation of effects on the environment of atmospheric pollution;

(2) what is the annual budget allocated by his Department for the study of the greenhouse effect and the potential implications for the United Kingdom of this phenomenon.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: For 1988-89, the Department allocated £191,000 for research on global pollution questions, including the greenhouse effect, and £1.442 million for air pollution effects research. For 1989-90, the planned expenditure on climate change research is £590,000.

Football Clubs (Membership Schemes)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has, in the light of his intention to introduce a national identity card scheme for football clubs, of the operation of the scheme run by Luton Town football club; and if he has any details of the club's record and attendances for the period since the introduction of the scheme and for the five years prior to that.

Mr. Moynihan: I am fully aware of the details of Luton's membership scheme and the success it has had in combating football hooliganism. Since the scheme was introduced on 16 August 1986 there has been only one arrest, for a drugs offence, at the club's home football league matches. Attendances and record for league matches are:

Season	Average home attendance	League position
1981-82	11,900	1st Division 2
1982-83	13,500	18th Division 1
1983-84	11,900	16th Division 1
1984-85	10,800	13th Division 1
1985-86	11,100	9th Division 1
1986-87	10,300	7th Division 1
1987-88	8,038	9th Division 1 Winners Littlewoods Cup
1988-89[1]	9,692

[1] 3 September to 3 December.

I am informed that the members who joined the membership scheme since its introduction have been as follows:

	Number
1986-87	22,000
1987-88	18,000
1988-89	19,000

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives from the Football Supporters Association and the National Federation of Football Supporters Clubs; who was in attendance and in what capacity; what was discussed; and if he will amend his plans to impose compulsory identity cards on all football supporters as a result of his discussions.

Mr. Moynihan: I met representatives of the FSA and the NFFSC, for the second time this year, on 6 December. Three hon. Friends with close links with football clubs attended the meeting—my hon. Friends, the members for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick) and Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans). I had also invited two hon. Members from the Labour party who were unfortunately unable to attend. We discussed the implications of a national membership scheme for football supporters and I said that I would take account of the comments of both bodies in considering the scheme when it is submitted.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those organisations which have made representations (a) in favour and (b) against the proposed national football membership scheme.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received some 950 representations about the principle of a scheme, most of them against. I will write to the hon. Member listing the organisations concerned. It would be for the proposed football membership authority to draw up a scheme and submit it to my right hon. Friend for approval.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received against the proposed football membership scheme.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 December 1988]: None—since the proposed football national membership scheme has neither been drafted by the football membership authority nor presented to the Secretary of State for his approval. However I have received some 950 representations on a wide range of issues relating to the idea of a scheme, most of them against.

Identity Cards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment whether his Department has investigated, or is currently studying, the usefulness of a national identity card to his departmental responsibilities; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 15 December at columns 1080-82.

European Football

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the cost to English football clubs of being excluded from European competitions.

Mr. Moynihan: None. Only the football authorities and the clubs could make such an estimate.

Football Clubs (Facilities)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the cost to English football clubs of upgrading their facilities in line with statutory requirements over the past three years.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that the football grounds improvement trust has provided £8·8 million to football league clubs over the past three years to assist them in meeting the requirements of the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975. The trust funds 75 per cent. of the cost of eligible ground safety schemes. There is no information held centrally on the actual expenditure by clubs on these schemes.

EC (Animals and Plants)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his statutory advisers have provided the European Commission with lists of threatened animals and plants in the European Economic Community within the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In January 1988 our statutory advisers, the Nature Conservancy Council, accepted a contract from the European Commission to provide lists of threatened animal and plant species in the European Community. The information was submitted to the Commission in March this year.

Pollution Control

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the last year for which figures are available, were proceedings taken against contractors and developers under sections 3 and 16 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In 1986, proceedings were taken in England and Wales in 130 cases under section 3 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974, and in eight cases under section 16. Details for separate categories of defendants are not available.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will review the enforcement powers available to local authorities under current planning and pollution control legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have appointed Robert Carnwath QC to review local authorities' planning enforcement powers. His report is expected in the new year. An announcement will be made shortly afterwards. We have also announced proposals which should make local authorities' enforcement powers more effective in relation to air pollution and waste disposal.

Council Housing (Torbay)

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will authorise the transfer of Torbay borough council's housing assets to a housing association in accordance with the council's recommendations.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend is currently considering Torbay borough council's request for consent to the sale of its housing to two housing associations. We shall announce our conclusion as soon as possible.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when tenants in proposed housing action trust areas will be balloted.

Mr. Trippier: When we have had an opportunity to consider the findings of the consultants studying the proposed housing action trust areas, the Secretary of State will decide next steps.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the repairs which will be undertaken in housing action trust areas.

Mr. Trippier: Housing action trusts will draw up their proposals for each area in consultation with local residents.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has made any estimate of how long it will take to establish housing action trusts; and how long they will stay in existence.

Mr. Trippier: Under the Housing Act 1988, housing action trusts can be established only after a ballot of tenants has been held in each area and after both Houses of Parliament have approved the necessary orders. The length of time each trust remains in existence will depend on the programme of works it decides to carry out in consultation with local residents and the speed with which this can be completed. The trusts will be under a statutory duty to use their best endeavours to achieve their objects as soon as practicable.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the date of publication of the three consultants' reports on housing action trusts.

Mr. Trippier: We have not yet received all the reports from the consultants studying the six areas proposed for housing action trusts.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was his Department's total expenditure on housing in 1979 and in the latest year available, at constant prices.

Mr. Trippier: Total gross capital public expenditure on housing in England in 1987-88 was £3,827 million; in 1979-80 it was £5,545 million (at 1987-88 prices). Current expenditure in 1987-88 was £1,333 million; in 1979-80 it was £3,217 million (at 1987-88 prices).

Housing Starts

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many public housing starts were made in 1979 and in the latest year available.

Mr. Trippier: Numbers of public sector housing starts in 1979 and 1987 appear in table 6.1 of "Housing and Construction Statistics, 1977-1987", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he proposes to give Bournemouth local authority on how to fulfil its statutory obligation to provide accommodation for the homeless, now that it has transferred all its housing stock to the private sector.

Mr. Trippier: Bournemouth has not transferred its housing stock. If the city council wished to do so, it would need to consult its tenants first (in accordance with schedule 3A to the Housing Act 1985) and then seek my right hon. Friend's consent. He would have to be satisfied that adequate arrangements had been made to meet Bournemouth's continuing statutory duties towards the homeless.

Food Poisoning

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources are made available by his Department for the investigation of food poisoning.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State pays block grant to local authorities through the rate support grant system. Grant is paid on the basis of authorities' expenditure needs. In assessing needs he takes into account environmental health duties. Block grant is an unhypothecated grant and it is for individual authorities to decide how they can best meet the needs of their area.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to what proportion of each local authority's resources are made available for the investigation of food poisoning.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for each local authority to determine: the information is not held by the Department.

Local Authority Expenditure

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he takes of the number of high-risk food premises within a local authority area when determining local authority expenditure.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Is assessing local authorities' expenditure needs my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State takes into account environmental health duties. This is determined by a number of factors including the total floor spaces of shops and restaurants in an authority's area.

Housing Association Grant (Liverpool)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from organisations on Merseyside about the level of grant available to housing associations in the region; and what his response has been.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has received a number of such representations from housing associations and others with an interest in the provision of rental housing on Merseyside. These have been taken into account in the decision on housing association grant levels for 1989-90, which I announced in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Knowles) on 14 December.

Clay Pigeon Shooting

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made on consultations with the Clay Pigeon Shooting Association on the permitted days' use of land for clay pigeon shooting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: A consultation paper was issued on 16 December. A copy of the paper together with a full list of the consultees have been placed in the Library of the House. The Clay Pigeon Shooting Association has been included among those consulted, and its response is awaited.

Mink

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether planning permission is necessary before the erection of mink farms and before the issuing of licences under the Mink Keeping Order 1987.

Mr. Chope: Since the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 came into force on 5 December planning permission has been necessary for the erection of new livestock units, including mink farms, within 400m of most residential and other buildings. Applications for planning permission should be made to local planning authorities. The issuing and renewal of licences needed under the Mink Keeping Order 1987 is a separate matter, for which the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Welsh Office Agriculture Department are responsible.

Crown Suppliers

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) why progress in selling the Crown Suppliers to the private sector has been slow;

(2) how many officials are engaged (a) full time and (b) part time in his Department's programme to sell the Crown Suppliers to the private sector;

(3) what is the estimated date of completion of the sale of the Crown Suppliers to the private sector.

Mr. Chope: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Croxteth Hall and Country Park

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of Croxteth hall and country park, Merseyside.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have considered very carefully proposals by the Merseyside residuary body for the detailed arrangements for the future of Croxteth hall and country park. To put an end to uncertainty over the future of Croxteth park we are minded to accept the recommendation that Croxteth should transfer to Liverpool city council on 1 April 1989. The transfer would include an endowment from the residuary body of £3 million to be held in a new Croxteth hall and country park trust fund currently being set up by Liverpool city council. The endowment would be applied to capital works for improving and developing the estate.

Subject to the outcome of consultations with the local district councils and interested parties, including local amenity organisations, an order would be made under section 67 of the Local Government Act 1985 giving effect to these proposals.

Air Pollution (Report)

Mr. Robert B. Jones: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government intend to respond to the Environment Committee's report on air pollution.

Mr. Ridley: We have today published our response to the Environment Committee's report on air pollution. The Committee's report appeared at a timely moment and addressed a number of issues on which policy has been developing quickly. In our response we broadly welcome the Committee's report; respond to its detailed recommendations; and outline a number of significant developments since the report was published.

Atmospheric Pollution

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has allocated any resources and support personnel to the international geosphere-biosphere programme in its current evaluation of the greenhouse problem and prospective solutions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. Funding of international non-governmental sciences is a matter for the Royal Society and the research councils and is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science. This Department is currently reviewing its own support of climate change research and will take a close interest in the progress of the IGBP.

Radon Radiation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by location the number of public sector buildings in Great Britain affected by radon radiation; and what is their action level reading.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not recorded in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Rating Reform

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has issued guide lines as to how the needs element in the Government grant system is to be applied to local government following the introduction of the poll tax for (a) district councils and (b) parish councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. No such guidelines have been issued in respect of the needs grant. Under sections 76(1) and 78(1) of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, the needs grant in England will be paid to the collection fund from which both district councils and parishes will draw their income. There will be a single needs assessment encompassing both district and parish functions. The Department is consulting the local authority associations about the basis of distributing needs grant and the papers are in the Library.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies have been printed of the pamphlet "You and the Community Charge", and what has been the cost to his Department of producing the pamphlet.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 19 December 1988]: A total of 100,000 copies have been produced initially, at a cost of approximately £21,500. More will be printed if demand warrants it.

ENERGY

Electricity (Scotland)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether it is his intention that the South of Scotland Electricity Company will be enabled to supply electricity to domestic consumers in England within or beyond the area of England now served by the South of Scotland Electricity Board.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Yes.

Power Station (Druridge Bay)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy why Factsheet No. 11, issued by his Department, listed as an asset to be transferred to National Power a power station at Druridge bay in Northumberland for which planning permission has not yet been applied for.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The allocation of the CEGB's assets between National Power and PowerGen includes sites for future possible power stations as well as producing stations.

Nuclear Materials (Safeguards)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has concerning safeguards research at (a) Euratom and (b) the International Atomic Energy Agency into the safeguarding of inertial confinement fusion technology.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am not aware that any such research is being carried on.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the definition used by his Department, of the phrase "subject to safeguards", used in relation to nuclear materials.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Nuclear materials in the United Kingdom which are subject to safeguards are reported to the safeguards authorities with regard to stocks and movements. Such nuclear materials are verified by Euratom, in accordance with chapter 7 of the Euratom treaty. In addition the IAEA may, under the terms of the UK/Euratom/IAEA agreement, choose to designate for inspection a facility containing nuclear material. The IAEA also inspects some nuclear material in the United Kingdom under earlier bilateral safeguards agreements.

Renewable Energies and Windpower

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department intends to investigate the work of P. C. Fuhri-Snethlage, on renewable energies and windpower, as described in evidence of 30 November at the Hinkley Point C inquiry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government are supporting a major programme of research and development on the renewable energy sources in order to stimulate their full exploitation where they are both economic and environmentally acceptable. The programme covers wind, tidal, geothermal, small hydro, wave, solar and biofuels. Within the wind programme, particular attention is paid to large wind turbines and a 3MW machine is being tested on Orkney.

Piper Alpha Incident

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made with his Department's technical investigation into the Piper Alpha accident.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Department's director of safety, Mr. James Petrie, has now produced a further report on the work done following his interim report which was published at the end of September. With the agreement of Lord Cullen, who will be conducting the public inquiry into the accident, I am today placing a copy of this further report in the Library of the House and am making copies widely available.

As further investigatory work is to be undertaken by the public inquiry, Mr. Petrie has requested that he be released from further investigation of the accident under the remit given by the Secretary of State and the Health and Safety Commission. My right hon. Friend has agreed with the commission that it should accept this request.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmonella

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence his Department has of vertical infection of hens' eggs by salmonella; what species are involved; and what is his estimate of the numbers of chickens involved.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Evidence has existed for a number of years of the ability of salmonella enteritidis to infect the ovaries of poultry and was noted by Snoeyenbos, Smyser and Van Rockel in the "Avian Diseases 13" in 1969. More recently articles have appeared in the Veterinary Record, on 24 September, which established a link between this infection in the laying bird and in the egg.

Salmonella enteritidis has been detected in laying hens, broilers and breeders and is also known in ducks.

Since salmonella does not provide an overt clinical disease in adult poultry, it is not possible to give precise figures of the extent of the infection without extensive testing, which, in the absence of a simple, rapid and sensitive test for salmonella enteritidis, is not possible.

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the incidence of salmonella enteritidis in commercial laying flocks.

Mr. MacGregor: Under the Zoonoses Order 1975, any person isolating salmonella organisms from poultry must notify my Department. So far this year, my Department has received 15 such reports of salmonella enteritidis isolations from commercial laying flocks. There are in total about 42,000 laying flocks in the United Kingdom. Each such reported isolation of salmonella enteritidis is thoroughly investigated by a veterinary surgeon of the veterinary investigation service.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many eggs have been imported in each of the last three years; what steps his Department has taken to protect the public against the importation of eggs contaminated by salmonella; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The figures for imports of shell eggs in the last three years are:

	(Million eggs)
1985	464
1986	338
1987	190

There is a very low degree of risk of contracting salmonella poisoning from imported, or home-produced, eggs particularly if everyone follows the advice of the chief medical officer.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the factors accounting for the different experience of salmonella incidence in the poultry industry in Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are aware that the salmonella problem is not confined to Great Britain alone. My officials are in contact with colleagues in Northern Ireland about the salmonella issues. To date there has not been a comparative assessment made of the situations both here and in Northern Ireland.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps has he taken to prevent salmonella from chickens which have been destroyed from getting into the food chain.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Various methods of disposal are available, including incineration and burial, neither of which should present any risk of salmonella being introduced into the food chain. In any case there are legal controls to ensure that salmonella is destroyed in the processing of animal protein.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance he has issued to local authorities about salmonella enteriditis in poultry products; if he will place copies of such guidance in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Guidance was issued to enforcement authorities on 17 August on the identification and rejection of birds showing visible signs of salmonella enteriditis at post-mortem inspection. A copy is being placed in the Library of the House.

Beef

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tonnes of South American thin skirt will be imported into (a) Britain and (b) Northern Ireland, as a result of a decision by the European Community beef management committee; and what representations he has received from the meat processing industry in Northern Ireland about the effect of this importation on their market.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No licences have yet been issued for the import of thin skirt under the quota. However, we understand that in view of the extent to which the quota has been oversubscribed, the quantity for which licences will be issued in the United Kingdom is likely to be less than 300 tonnes. Such representation which my Department has had from meat processors generally welcome the opening of this quota in order to re-establish trade disrupted by the Community's adoption of the harmonised system of tariff.

Eggs

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the compensation scheme for egg producers announced on 19 December will be extended to manufacturers of poultry farm equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The schemes I announced on 19 December are designed to reduce the surplus of eggs on the market by encouraging the destruction of unwanted eggs and the culling of about 10 per cent. of the laying flock. Manufacturers of poultry farm equipment will not qualify for payment under these schemes.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of eggs sold in shops and supermarkets is produced by large-scale egg producers; and what proportion of the total number of egg producers in the United Kingdom his Department classifies as large-scale producers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department does not classify egg producers according to size. Information on the proportion of eggs produced by holding size for sale in the United Kingdom is not available.

At the June 1987 agricultural census the distribution of holdings in the United Kingdom by size of laying flock was as follows:

Size of laying flock (fowls)	Number of holdings with laying fowls	Per cent.	Number of fowls thousands	Per cent.
Under 1,000	39,574	94·56	1,442	3·8
1,000-less than 20,000	1,907	4,56	10,547	27·6
20,000-less than 50,000	225	0·54	6,854	17·9
50,000 and over	144	0·34	19,386	50·7
Total	41,850	100	38,229	100

Half the fowls were on holdings with flocks of 50,000 fowls or more.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the compensation to egg producers announced on 19 December will go to small-scale egg producers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Payments under the Egg Industry (England and Wales) Scheme, and under the similar schemes for Scotland and Northern Ireland, will be made to egg packers for the destruction of surplus eggs. All egg producers, whether large or small, should benefit from the removal of surplus eggs from the market.

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has considered the introduction of a scheme for the slaughter of laying flocks or the destruction of eggs found to contain salmonella; and if he will give figures for the number of flocks so infected.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 19 December 1988]: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 19 December 1988 at column 21.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in the light of the sampling of eggs to detect traces of salmonella, the producers of those eggs found to contain salmonella, and producers whose farms fail to comply with health regulations, will receive Government compensation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 21 December 1988]: There are no plans to pay Government compensation to those commercial egg producers in cases where salmonella organisms have been isolated or who are unable to comply with the recently introduced code of practice. However free advice will be available from the state veterinary service in support of that given by their own veterinary surgeon to assist those producers in minimising the risks of salmonella infection and complying with the code.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the cost of the testing of eggs for traces of salmonella will be borne by the egg producing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 21 December 1988]: The recently issued code of practice applicable to commercial laying flocks sets out that the cost of bacteriological monitoring of laying flocks incluing the testing of eggs for the presence of salmonella will be borne by the poultry industry.

Nigeria (Development Aid)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the results of meetings held in Abuja, Nigeria during November by the Parliamentary Secretary, the Baroness Trumpington, with members of the Federal Government of Nigeria in respect of financial aid for development.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The main purpose of my noble Friend's visit to Nigeria in November was to open an agricultural seminar, but while in Lagos she took the opportunity on behalf of the Government to announce a three-year agricultural education project involving links between British and Nigerian agricultural colleages, a conservation and rural development programme at Oban Hills in Cross River state, and the provision of consultants for a study of the Nigerian sugar industry. She mentioned existing projects, including emergency aid for controls against grasshopper pests, funding for the International Institute for Tropical Agriculture in Ibadan and the current World Bank study of agricultural potential on the Mambilla plateau. She said that the British Government would consider other Nigerian requests for further aid to the agricultural sector under the technical co-operation programme. Subsequent action, of course, falls to my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development.

Animal Feed

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is giving consideration to requiring animal feed suppliers to inform purchasers of the contents of their product.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Feedingtuffs Regulations 1988 already require suppliers of animal feeds to provide detailed information about the content of their products. In addition, the new codes of practice for the control of salmonella recommend poultry farmers to obtain assurance from suppliers that feeds are free from salmonella.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to improve the monitoring of the content of feed produced by large egg producers for their own livestock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Yes. Guidelines for the production of final feeds for livestock are now being issued. They provide advice on the monitoring and manufacture of both raw materials and feedingstuffs. A detailed code of practice is being drawn up.

Chernobyl

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the National Farmers Union representatives who attended the post-Chernobyl briefing on north Wales held at his Department on Friday 9 December.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Representation of the National Farmers Union at any particular meeting is a matter for the union.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the Country Landowners Association representatives who attended the post-Chernobyl briefing on north Wales held at his Department on Friday 9 December.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Representation of the Country Landowners Association at any particular meeting is a matter for the association.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the names of the representatives of the Farmers Union of Wales who attended the briefing meeting in London on Friday 9 December to discuss the continuing effects of Chernobyl.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No representatives of the Farmers Union of Wales attended this meeting, which was devoted largely to the situation as it affects Cumbria. The Welsh Office Agriculture Department will be inviting the FUW, amongst other interested organisations, to a meeting to deal specifically with the situation in north Wales in the new year.

Parrots

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the issue of licences for the importation of parrots and parrot-like birds and the number of licences granted during each month in 1988 to the most recent practicable date.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Under the Importation of Birds Poultry and Hatching Eggs Order 1979, my Ministry issues licences for the importation of parrots and parrot-like birds, subject to conditions designed to safeguard this country against the introduction of animal diseases such as Newcastle disease. These conditions include a requirement for a period of post-import quarantine.

The number of licences issued during 1988 is:

	Number
January	121
February	91
March	85
April	75
May	97
June	118
July	109
August	92
September	77
October	104
November	96
December[1]	43
Total	1,108

[1] Up to 20th.

Aquatic Environment

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) pursuant to his reply of 8 December to the hon. Member for Gower, Official Report, column 238, on Bristol channel sludge dumping, whether his Department will now initiate further monitoring surveys of the sewage sludge dump to update the results of the 1975 to 1978 survey published in fisheries research technical report no. 59;

(2) when his Department will publish the aquatic environment monitoring report for 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 20 December 1988]: Monitoring work on the aquatic environment is carried out on an ongoing basis and it is usually impracticable to draw detailed conclusions from one year's data. The report, which is expected to be published in early 1989, will cover field assessments made in 1986 and 1987. Such assessments were, in fact, made of the Bristol channel sewage sludge site in 1983 and 1987. The results have reaffirmed the findings reported in fisheries research technical report No. 59.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the research known to his Department which is relevant to food poisoning and has been (a) ongoing and (b) commissioned in each of the last five years; and if he will state the source of funding in each case.

Mr. Ryder [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1988]: The following list of research projects covers most of the publicly funded research relevant to microbial food poisoning ongoing and newly commissioned over the past two years. A fuller reply could be prepared only at disproportionate cost.

Microbiology research (Pathogens)

Institutes	Project number	Title
CSG: Commission with the Research Associations MAFF Funded Work
FMBRA	F7	Survival and Growth of Salmonellae and Bacillus subtilis in Baking Ingredients
CFDRA	600	Growth Characteristics of Food Poisoning Organisms at Sub-lethal Temperatures
CFDRA	1022	Investigate Combinations of Sub-lethal Treatments to Preserve Processed Foods
CFDRA	3005	Recovery and Detection of Sub-lethally Injured Pathogens
CFDRA/BFMIRA	2950/M50	Microbial Antagonism to Increase the Safety and Stability of Chilled Foods

NORTHERN IRELAND

Security

1. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

2. Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

10. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the current security situation in Northern Ireland.

12. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer my hon. Friend and right hon. and hon. Members to the reply I gave on 10 November, Official Report, column 468. Since then six people have been killed in incidents arising from the security situation in Northern Ireland. A policeman was shot dead on 21 November, a 13-year-old girl and her grandfather were killed in an explosion outside Benburb RUC station on 23 November, a civilian was shot dead in Portadown on 13 December and a UDR soldier was shot dead in Downpatrick on 16 December. All were murdered by the Provisional IRA. A further civilian was shot dead by gunmen at Coagh on 24 November. Although no one has claimed responsibility for this murder, it is believed to have been the work of a Loyalist paramilitary organisation.

The continued courage and vigilance of the security forces have prevented further terrorist outrages which would have inevitably resulted in greater loss of life and destruction of property.

The efforts of the security forces continue to yield encouraging results. Since the beginning of the year a total of 405 people have been charged with serious offences, including 20 with murder and 32 with attempted murder. Some 530 weapons, over 103,000 rounds of ammunition and 9,630 lbs of explosives have been recovered in Northern Ireland.

During the same period, the Garda Siochana has recovered 306 weapons, about 140,600 rounds of ammunition and about 1,100 lbs of explosives.

Harland and Wolff and Short Bros.

3. Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the position of both Harland and Wolff, and Shorts plc, in relation to the Government's plans to privatise the companies.

Mr. Viggers: The Government believe that the best prospects for the future of Harland and Wolff and Shorts lie within the private sector and they are seeking purchasers for the two companies on this basis. Negotiations are continuing with possible acquirers of Harland and Wolff; these include senior managers at the yard who are considering a management/employee buy-out.

With regard to Shorts, an advertisement was placed on 17 November inviting parties to register their interest in buying Shorts with the Government's merchant bank advisers, Kleinwort Benson, by 2 December.

Nationalised Industries (Privatisation)

4. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress to date regarding privatisation of Northern Ireland nationalised industries.

Mr. Viggers: In strict terms there are no nationalised industries in Northern Ireland.

Consultants have carried out a preliminary study of the main elements likely to influence the approach to the privatisation of Northern Ireland Electricity. Further work is being undertaken on points raised by this study and the Government's proposals will be published in due course.

Negotiations are continuing with possible acquirers of Harland and Wolff; these include senior managers at the yard who are considering a management/employee buy-out.

With regard to Shorts, an advertisement was placed on 17 November inviting parties to register their interest in buying Shorts with the Government's merchant bank advisers, Kleinwort Benson, by 2 December.

Harland and Wolff

5. Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made to bring Harland and Wolff's management/employee buyout bid to fruition.

Mr. Viggers: I have had discussions with senior managers of Harland and Wolff about a proposed management/employee buy-out and my officials have also met these managers and their financial advisers to progress matters. No firm proposals have yet been tabled.

16. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will reconsider his decisions to privatise Harland and Wolff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The Government believe that the best prospects for the future of Harland and Wolff lie within the private sector and is seeking purchasers for the company on this basis. Negotiations are continuing with possible acquirers of Harland and Wolff; these include senior managers at the yard who are considering a possible management/employee buy-out.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met trade union representatives from Harland and Wolff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: I met representatives of the Confederation of Shipbuilding and Engineering Unions from Harland and Wolff on 31 October 1988. We exchanged views on the future of the company and I have since written to the confederation in response to a paper which the representatives left with me.

Nurses (Regrading)

6. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met senior representatives from the units of managements within the Eastern and Southern health and social services boards to discuss anomalies resulting from the implementation of the clinical grading review for nurses and midwives.

Mr. Needham: I have not had any such meetings.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of grades issued before commencement of the appeal procedure as a result of the clinical grading review, giving a breakdown of all grades (a) on a Northern Ireland basis, (b) on an area board basis, (c) on a unit of management basis and (d) on a hospital basis.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 December 1988]: Details of the grading outcomes for nursing staff covered by the clinical grading review for Northern Ireland are as follows:

Northern Ireland [1] Numbers of staff and percentage movement to each grade

	Percentage	Numbers
A.	17	2,622
B.	1	154
C.	12	1,851
D.	16	2,468
E.	32	4,935
F.	4	617
G.	14	2,159
H.	2	308
I.	2	308
Staff in post wholetime equivalent	—	15,422

[1] Includes staff employed by the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Northern Ireland.

For the grading outcomes on an area board basis, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question by the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) on 9 December 1988.

Information on a unit of management and hospital basis is not held centrally.

Short Brothers

7. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about progress with the privatisation of Short Brothers.

17. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the proposed timetable for the sale of Short Brothers.

Mr. Viggers: An advertisement was placed on 17 November inviting interested parties to register their interest by 2 December with the Government's merchant bank advisers, Kleinwort Benson. A number of potential purchasers have been identified and an information memorandum is being prepared which will be issued soon to selected prospective buyers.

Kilroot Power Station

8. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when construction work will commence on phase II of Kilroot power station.

Mr. Viggers: No decision has yet been taken on this matter. On current planning assumptions, Kilroot II will be needed by 1995-96 and construction work should begin by 1992. The start of construction would be brought forward if there was a decision to make the station available earlier or if flue gas desulphurisation plant had to be installed. Both these issues are under consideration at present.

Driving Licences

9. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he plans to bring the law on driving licences into line with that which applies to the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: I plan to bring the law regarding vocational licensing into line with that proposed in the Great Britain Road Traffic (Driving Licences and Information Systems) Bill presently before Parliament. I have no plans at present to change any other aspects of driver licensing.

Labour Statistics

11. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current level of unemployment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: At 10 November 1988, the latest date for which unemployment figures are available, there were 108,981 unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland, representing 15·7 per cent. of the work force.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the numbers of people unemployed and claiming benefit by (a) constituency and (b) district in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 December 1988]: The information cannot be given by constituency or district area. The numbers by social security office are as follows:

Number of people unemployed and claiming benefit at 10 November 1988

Social security office	Number
Andersonstown	4,138
Antrim	2,763

Anglo-Irish Conference

13. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement as to the items on the agenda for the next meeting of the Anglo-Irish Conference.

Mr. Tom King: The agenda for the next meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference has not yet been prepared, but it is likely to include subjects raised at the last meeting of the conference on 14 December. A copy of the joint statement issued after that meeting, which sets out the subjects then discussed, has been placed in the Library.

Ultimate Dream Project

14. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is presently taking to secure the Ultimate Dream cruise liner project for Harland and Wolff.

Mr. Viggers: Senior managers at Harland and Wolff are considering whether the Ultimate Dream, or other orders, could provide the basis for a buy-out by managers and employees at the yard. I have had discussions with these managers, but, as yet, no firm proposals have been tabled.

Republic of Ireland (Discussions)

15. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what subjects he expects to discuss at his next meeting with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: No agenda has yet been drawn up for my next meeting with Irish Ministers, but it is likely to include the discussion of subjects raised at the last meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference on 14 December. A copy of the joint statement issued after that meeting, which sets out the subject discussed, has been placed in the Library.

RUC-Scottish Police (Collaboration)

18. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and if he discussed the collaboration policies of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and Scottish police forces in the fight against terrorism.

Mr. Tom King: I last met the Chief Constable on 13 December. The nature of our discussions is confidential.

Terrorism

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civilian fatalities have occurred as a result of unrest in the Province during the period 1 January 1970 to 31 October 1985; and how many of these fatalities have been attributed to (a) Loyalist paramilitaries, (b) Republican paramilitaries, (c) security forces, (d) the Royal Ulster Constabulary, and (e) unidentified forces.

Mr. Ian Stewart: During the period 1 January 1970 to 31 October 1985, a total of 1,693 civilians were killed as a result of the security situation in Northern Ireland. This total included suspected terrorists killed by their own devices. It is not possible to state with certainty which paramilitary organisation was responsible for every murder, but, as far as can be ascertained, the breakdown of these deaths is as follows:—

(a) Deaths attributed to Loyalist paramilitary organisations —between 600 and 700.

(b) Deaths attributed to Republican paramilitary organisations—between 700 and 800.

In addition, 225 deaths were attributed to the Army (including the UDR), and 33 to the RUC.

Royal Victoria Hospital

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are currently waiting for cardiac operations at the Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast; what is the average waiting time; and what proposals there are to reduce the waiting time for such operations.

Mr. Needham: At 30 June, 1988 there were 733 people waiting for cardiac operations at the Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast. Information on average waiting times is not collected, but of the 733 patients on the waiting list, 354 have been waiting for less than one year. As part of a range of measures designed to reduce waiting times I have recently announced that a £1·3 million capital scheme will be undertaken in 1989 to expand the post-operative recovery facilities at the Royal Victoria hospital from eight to 12 beds. A comprehensive review of adult cardiology services in the Eastern board areas has also been carried out by a committee under the chairmanship of Sir John Badenoch. The committee's report, which recommends measures to increase the number of heart operations at the Royal Victoria within existing resources, has been accepted for implementation and will be reflected in the board's operational plans for 1989-90.

Mature Students

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students aged 26 years and over enrolled in Northern Ireland universities and colleges of education in the past five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Available information is for those aged 25 and over and is as follows:

Academic year	Full time	Part time
1982-83	1,016	956
1983-84	1,069	1,188
1984-85	1,423	3,302
1985-86	1,681	3,951
1986-87	1,776	3,927

Note: Figures from 1984-85 onwards reflect the merger of The New University of Ulster and the Ulster Polytechnic.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the funding of further and higher education in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a statistical breakdown of the characteristics of students in further and higher education in Northern Ireland analysed by (a) age, (b) sex, (c) country of origin and (d) category of award for the past five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Available information is as follows:

Academic year	(a) By age			(b) By sex		(c) Country of origin
	20 and under	21-24	25 and over	Men	Women	United Kingdom	Other

[1] Includes postgraduate bursaries and studentships and teacher training awards. Excludes adult education bursaries (c. 40-50 per annum) and youth service awards (c. 30-50 per annum).

Student and Parent Governors

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the position of student and parent governors in further education college governance; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Some further education interests have written objecting to any parental representation on college governing bodies and seeking assurances about student representation. For the purposes of legislation I intend to follow closely the approach in the Education Reform Act.

Prevention of Terrorism

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a breakdown of those people arrested under the Prevention of Terrorism Act for each year since 1974 (a) at ports, (b) at airports, (c) in their homes and (d) in other places; and if he will provide a breakdown of these figures between men and women detainees.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 8 December 1988]: Available information is as follows:

Year	Firearms recovered[1]	Explosives recovered[1] (kgs)	Occupied houses searched[2]
1974	1,236	11·7	19,576
1975	820	4·9	3,907
1976	736	9·7	10,749
1977	563	1·7	9,264
1978	393	0·9	6,309
1979	300	0·9	4,740

1985	173	3·3	446
1986	174	2·4	689
1987	206	5·8	790
1988[3]	431	3·4	2,281

[1] These amounts refer to total amounts of munitions recovered not just finds during searches of occupied houses.

[2] House searches are primarily carried out under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Acts Legislation.

[3] To 31 October.

Helios Programme

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement regarding the Helios programme outlining what plans or proposals the Government has for it in respect of Northern Ireland; whether there was any policy consideration behind Northern Ireland not being invited to nominate representatives to the relevant European Community advisory committee; and whether arrangements have been made to take account of the views of the relevant agencies in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 December 1988]: A working group of officials from all Northern Ireland Departments with an interest in the European Community second action programme for disabled people (the Helios programme) has been established. The group is in turn represented on a national co-ordinating committee which was set up to oversee the United Kingdom's participation in the programme. A vocational rehabilitation project nominated by the Department of Economic Development has been included in the EC network of local model projects.

It is a matter for each of the member states in the European Community to field representatives to meetings of EC committees and it would be unrealistic to expect each region of a member state to be represented on the committees. The co-ordinating arrangements that I have described are, however, designed to ensure that Northern Ireland's interests are taken into account by the United Kingdom representatives on the EC advisory committee. Consideration is currently being given to the most appropriate way, to facilitate the involvement of disability organisations thoughout the United Kingdom in the programme.

Family Credit

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the numbers in receipt of family credits in Northern Ireland; what is the total number of dependents involved; and what is the total amount paid in family credit in the latest available week in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 December 1988]: At 6 December 1988 the estimated number of people in receipt of family credit in Northern Ireland was 14,000. The estimated number of dependent children involved was 36,000. Precise details of the amount paid in any particular week are not available but it is estimated that the total amount paid from April 1988 to 6 December 1988 was £19 million.

Government Training Centres

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the numbers in each GTC in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 21 December 1988]: Attendance at each of the 12 training centres in Northern Ireland during week commencing 12 December 1988 was as follows:

	Number
Alfred street, Belfast	136
Ballymena	385
Boucher road, Belfast	262
Craigavon	273

Income Support

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the numbers receiving unemployment benefit but not receiving income support in each social security office in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 December 1988]: The information is as follows:

Numbers receiving unemployment benefit only at 10 November 1988

Mr. John Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the numbers receiving each of the premium rates of income support at each social security office in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 December 1988]: While some income support claimants receive more than one premium, statistics for the highest value premium only are recorded centrally in such cases. On this basis the numbers in each category of premium at the latest date are as follows:

Social Security office	Higher pensioner premium	Ordinary pensioner premium	Disability premium	Lone parent premium	Family premium

Orlit Houses

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of the main contractors invited to tender for the contract to replace Orlit houses at Barnagh park, Donaghadee; and how many of these contractors have their head offices within the boundary of the borough of Ards.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 December 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the chief executive has advised me that the following five firms were invited to submit tenders for phase 1 of the Orlit replacement scheme at Barnagh park, Donaghadee:

KD Contracts, Belfast
Kelly and Keenan, Ballynahinch
McQuillan Bros, Newry
Pilot Construction Ltd., Belfast
Polly Bros. Ltd., Downpatrick

None of these firms has its head office within the boundary of the borough of Ards.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of the main contractors being invited to tender for the contract to replace Orlit houses at Darragh road, Comber; and how many of these contractors have their head offices within the boundary of the borough of Ards.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 December 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the chief executive has advised me that the following seven firms were invited to submit tenders for phase 1 of the Orlit replacement scheme at Darragh road, Comber:

Calvert Bros. Ltd., Portadown
Coleman Bros., Portaferry
P. J. Conway (Contractors) Ltd., Magherafelt
Gilbert-Ash (NI) Ltd., Belfast
McParland and Gordon Ltd., Banbridge
McQuillan Bros., Newry
Savage Bros. Contractors Ltd., Ballynahinch

One of these firms has its head office within the boundary of the borough of Ards.

EMPLOYMENT

YTS

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed on YTS in Nottingham.

Mr. Cope: As at 19 December 1988, there were 3,619 young people in training on YTS in the city of Nottingham, of whom 518 had employed status.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people have come to the end of their bridging allowance without an offer of a YTS place in Blyth Valley.

Mr. Cope: It is not possible to provide this information, either nationally or for Blyth Valley. While young people are receiving bridging allowance they are entitled to take a job or YTS place without going through the careers service, and may also return to full-time education without letting the careers service know. Others will have reached the end of their bridging allowance period without making themselves available to receive the offer of a YTS place.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployment benefit adjudication officers are available to serve the Nottingham, North constituency; and how many cases they are currently dealing with.

Mr. Lee: Information is not available in the precise form requested, as adjudication officers are not attached to individual unemployment benefit offices or constituencies. They work in groups which cover a number of offices.

On 30 November 1988, adjudication officers were currently considering 1,591 cases arising on claims for unemployment benefit in the adjudication office area of Nottingham, which includes the constituency of Nottingham, North. The number of adjudication officers serving the Nottingham adjudication office is five.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the retail prices index advisory committee will review (i) the implications of the abolition of domestic rates, (ii) the inclusion of holiday expenditure in the index, (iii) progress on recommendations made in the committee's last report and (iv) the exclusion of mortgage interest payments from the index.

Mr. Lee: The committee is currently considering the first of the matters mentioned by the hon. Gentleman and will shortly be turning its attention to the second and third, but we have no plans to exclude mortgage interest payments from the index and this is not on the committee's agenda.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the occasions on which the retail prices index advisory committee has been convened since 1986.

Mr. Lee: The committee was convened in October 1988 for the first time since 1986. It is now meeting and will be reporting in the course of next year.

Telephone Survey

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what fee was paid by his Department to IFF Research Ltd. for the telephone survey of 1,073 London employees; and what was the method and purpose of the survey.

Mr. Cope: The total fee paid to IFF Research Ltd. for the telephone survey of 1,073 employers was £41,975. Full details of the methods used were published by HMSO in November 1988 in a report entitled "The London Labour Market", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Building Sites (Safety)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of building sites in London, notified to the health and safety inspectorate on the appropriate notification form under the Factories Act 1961, on the Health and Safety Executive computerised database SHIELD, during 1987; and how many inspectors were in the field in London inspecting these sites during 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive received 3,316 notifications of building sites in 1987. Details of notifications are not retained on HSE's computerised database SHIELD. On 31 December 1987 12 qualified inspectors were employed on construction work in London.

Factory Inspectors

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of (a) qualified factory inspectors and (b) trainee factory inspectors, employed by the Health and Safety Executive for the latest date for which information is available; what this is expected to be by March 1989 if current recruitment intentions are followed; and what percentage of factory inspectors were or will be trainee inspectors, at each date.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 December 1988 484 qualified factory inspectors and 78 trainee factory inspectors were employed in the Health and Safety Executive's factory inspectorate. In addition 50 qualified factory inspectors were employed elsewhere in HSE. The number of inspectors in post at the end of the financial year will depend both on the timing of individual recruitment and on whether unforeseen wastage occurs. The executive's objective is to reach a target of 588 inspectors in post in the inspectorate early in the next financial year.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what charges were made by the Health and Safety Executive to the organisers of the conference comprising representatives of private fee-paying schools held in the conference room of the health and safety area office at Quay house, Quay street, Manchester, on 23 November 1988 for the use of (i) the premises, (ii) equipment, (iii) refreshments and (iv) Health and Safety Executive staff time.

Mr. Nicholls: None.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what changes in the staffing levels of the Health and Safety Executive have been effected in Scotland since 1980.

Mr. Nicholls: The total number of Health and Safety Executive staff employed in Scotland in each year since 1980 was as follows:

1 January	Number
1980	231
1981	225
1982	208
1983	200
1984	193
1985	187
1986	176
1987	176
1988	177

On 1 December 1988, the total was 166.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what changes in the staffing levels of the Health and Safety Executive have been effected in Britain, excluding Scotland, since 1980.

Mr. Nicholls: The total number of Health and Safety Executive staff employed in Britain, excluding Scotland, in each year since 1980 was as follows (1 January figures):

	Number
1980	3,987
1981	3,841
1982	3,631
1983	3,536
1984	3,525
1985	3,524
1986	3,463
1987	3,521
1988	3,324

On 1 December 1988 the total was 3,359.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workplace inspections were carried out by the inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive in the Scotland, west area for the years 1981 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available for the years 1981 to 1984.

The following table shows the number of workplace inspection visits made by the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates in the Scotland, west area for each year from 1985 to 1988:

Year[1]	Number of visits
1985-86	9,464
1986-87	9,083
1987-88	9,586

[1] 1 April—31 March.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if any changes are planned for the staffing levels of the two Scottish areas of the inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive recruits factory and agricultural inspectors on a national basis through open competition. Recruitment is currently under way. Allocations of new recruits to areas will depend on the number of successful candidates who take up post and on the operational needs of each office, and it is not yet possible to say how many successful candidates will be allocated to the two Scottish areas.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if any changes are planned in the staffing levels of the inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive for Britain.

Mr. Nicholls: Recruitment is currently under way with the aim of increasing the numbers of factory and agricultural inspectors in the inspectorates from 1 December 1988 levels of 562 and 154 respectively to 588 factory inspectors and 160 agricultural inspectors early in the new financial year. Planned staffing levels beyond this period are still being formulated and will be published in the Health and Safety Commission's plan of work in March 1989.

Accidents

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the waiting time for inspections carried out as a result of all reported accidents, area by area throughout Britain, for the years 1981 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of fatal and major reported accidents in the Scotland, west area for the years 1981 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is given in the table:

Numbers of fatal and major injuries reported[1] in the Health and Safety Executive's Scotland West Area

Fatal Injuries

Year	Employees	Self-employed	non-employed
1981	33	4	7
1982	28	—	11
1983	15	4	3
1984	23	2	4
1985	17	1	9
Q1 1986	8	—	1
[2]1986-87	13	2	7
[5]1987-88	19	2	4

Major Injuries[3]

Year	[4]Employees	Self-employed	non-employed
1981	631	1	95
1982	625	3	121
1983	610	1	62
1984	534	2	104
1985	516	9	74
Q1 1986	148	2	25
[2]1986-87	836	13	293
[5]1987-88	743	15	328

[1] Injuries reported to the Health and Safety Executive's factory, agricultural and nuclear installations inspectorates and to the local authorities and occurring as a result of work activities. Data for HSE's mines and quarries inspectorate, are only readily available for the year commencing 1 April 1987. The provisional figures are: 1 fatal and 18 major injuries.

[2] Year commencing 1 April 1986.

[3] From 1981 to 1986 Q1, as defined in the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 and thereafter in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR). RIDDOR widened the definition of a major injury. Figures for major injuries for 1986-87 onwards are therefore not comparable with previous figures.

[4] Includes fatal injuries to members of the public arising from work activity, only for those fatal injuries reported to local authorities in 1981-1985.

[5] The provisional data excludes that from local authorities.

Child Care Payments

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of women on employment training are in receipt of child care payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the number of employment training participants qualifying for child care payments is not yet available. It is planned to collect information at the end of March and the results will be available at the end of April.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of unemployment in the London borough of Brent.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 10 November 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the London borough of Brent was 11,928.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of people (a) employed and (b) self-employed in the United Kingdom on the latest available date.

Mr. Lee: In June 1988 there were 25,739,000 people in the work force in employment in the United Kingdom; of which 2,985,000 were self-employed. The work force in employment comprises employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the current levels of employment in the north-west of England.

Mr. Lee: In June 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 2,603,000 people in the civilian work force in employment in the north-west region. This is an increase of 77,000 since June 1983. The civilian work force in employment comprises employees in employment, the self-employed and participants in work-related Government training programme.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest unemployment figures for the parish of Renishaw in Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement on the estimated trend throughout 1989.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information. Unemployment statistics are not available for parish areas. However, in November 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the local authority ward of Renishaw in Derbyshire was 106, compared with 146 in November 1987, a fall of 40 or 27·4 per cent. over the year. This comparison is affected by the change in the coverage of the count from September 1988 due to new benefit regulations for young people aged under 18.

This Department does not make predictions of unemployment.

Restart

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of unemployed people (a) called in for interview under the restart scheme and (b) who have attended those interviews.

Mr. Lee: Since 1 July 1986, some 6·5 million invitations have been issued to attend a restart interview and 5 million interviews have been conducted.

Construction Industry (Accidents)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he intends to take to reduce the numbers of people seriously injured and maimed every year in Great Britain as a result of construction accidents.

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he intends to take to ensure adequate training and supervision and reasonable precautions in the construction industry to prevent falls.

Mr. Cope: New regulations are being prepared which provide for the management and co-ordination of health and safety on multi-contractor sites, increase the number of safety supervisors in smaller companies and amend the site notification procedure to identify sites where there are high-risk activities. The introduction of regulations which would make the wearing of safety helmets compulsory on contruction sites is also planned.

In addition to concentrating on the inspection of the more hazardous activities in the construction industry, HSE inspectors will also be paying attention to the quality of site management and its ability to manage health and safety. They will pursue their inquiries and any enforcement action to the highest levels in companies which do not measure up to the standards expected of them.

Mechanical Excavators (Safety)

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made towards the harmonisation of vehicle controls on mechanical excavators in use within the European Community in the interests of operator safety.

Mr. Cope: Between now and 1992 European standards will be prepared to support the harmonisation of safety requirements for all machinery including excavators. No decision has been made within the European Community as to the inclusion of vehicle controls.

National Council for Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the National Council for Vocational Qualifications has now defined the levels of competence and training above level 4; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: No. The national council is currently discussing with relevant professional bodies how the national vocational qualifications framework might be extended above level 4. The council has been asked to report to Ministers on the outcome of these discussions next year.

Tourism

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many hotels and tourism-related establishments have received section 4 grants since 1987; how many of these are in Cumbria; and if he expects to make an announcement on Government support for the tourism industry in the near future.

Mr. Lee: Between April 1987 and November 1988 the English tourist board made offers of section 4 grant assistance to 1,008 hotel and tourism-related projects, of which 72 are in Cumbria. I shall shortly be considering the outcome of the review of tourism policy which I announced in July. This is bound to take a little time, but I will make a further announcement as soon as possible.

Employment Training

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the quality assurance monitoring of employment training programmes has been initiated (i) nationally and (ii) in Oxfordshire.

Mr. Nicholls: Yes. Training Agency staff are working with training agents and training managers to develop the quality of employment training in all areas.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether there is any requirement on trainees to spend a set proportion of the working week on work experience and on directed training.

Mr. Nicholls: There is no requirement for trainees on employment training to spend a set proportion of the training week on practical experience and on directed training. However, everyone entering the programme is entitled to have at least 40 per cent. of their time on the programme spent on directed training.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to publish data about the number of employment training trainees receiving work placements in inner city areas (i) where local authorities are not participating in employment training and (ii) where local authorities are co-operating with employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no plans to collect or publish information in the form suggested.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those local authorities which took part in the community programme and are not providing work placements for employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: Comprehensive information on training placements is not held by the Training Agency and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will update the answer to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East of 9 May, Official Report, column 47, regarding the final outcome for those managing agents initially awarded provisional ATO status.

Mr. Cope: Of the 1,715 managing agents who had been awarded provisional ATO status after the first monitoring period (which ended on 31 July 1987):

1586 have been awarded full status
99 have withdrawn
18 were rejected
12 decisions remain to be made.

Sharon Friend (Accident)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether an investigation was made into the accident to Sharon Friend at a fairground in Bromley, Kent in May; and whether any prosecution is being undertaken.

Mr. Nicholls: An inspector from the Health and Safety Executive investigated the accident to Sharon Friend on 14 May 1988 at Beckenham fair. Prosecution is not proposed.

Claimants

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of claimants whose eligibility for state benefit was investigated via the unemployment benefit office because they did not satisfactorily complete (a) restart interview forms and (b) the availability for work forms, for each year since 1985 and for the latest available dates in 1988.

Mr. Lee: No claimant has their eligibility for benefits investigated simply because they have not satisfactorily completed a form. Cases may be referred for investigation if doubts arise about the claimant's availability for work. Referral would have to be considered if a claimant refused to supply information which was needed to confirm their availability.

Tourist Industry

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now publish the report of the review committee into the tourist industry which he established last July.

Mr. Lee: I have not yet considered the report and I have no plans to publish it.

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the annual rate of increase in the rates of payment under the job release scheme in each year of its existence; when the next increase is due; and what will be the amount of that increase.

Mr. Lee: The percentage increases in the allowances are given in the following table.

	Tax free		Taxable
	higher	lower	higher	lower
1977-78	35·0	15·2
1978-79	14·3	18·9
1979-80	13·7	14·3
1980-81	11·0	11·0	11·3	10·5
1981-82	8·9	8·8	8·5	9·5
1982-83	5·0	5·0	5·0	5·0
1983-84	5·0	5·1	5·0	5·0
1984-85	3·9	4·1	0·9	1·7
1985-86	4·0	4·0	4·0	3·9
1986-87	3·1	3·8	0·7	0·8
1987-88	4·0	4·0	1·3	1·6

The next increase in allowances is due in April 1989. My Department is currently considering the level of increase and I will inform the House as soon as a decision is reached.

Labour and Social Affairs Council

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the European Community Labour and Social Affairs Council held in Brussels on 16 December.

Mr. Cope: The Council reached a common position on the proposed framework directive on measures to encourage improvement in the safety and health of workers at the work place. This is the keystone for setting minimum standards for health and safety at work agreed under the social policy provision of the Single European Act; and is broadly consistent with the existing United Kingdom legislation in this area.

Also in the field of health and safety at work, the Council adopted a directive on exposure limits. This provides for the establishment by member states of limit values for toxic substances. The Council was unable to reach a common position on a proposed directive covering the protection of workers from risks related to exposure to carcinogens at work, because the European Parliament had not yet delivered its opinion. It agreed that benzene which had been the substance of a separate proposal rejected by European Parliament would come within the scope of this proposal.

There was general discussion on the social dimension of the single market in the light of the European Council's conclusions at Hanover in June, and Rhodes in December this year. No resolution was adopted.

A wide measure of agreement was reached on the second phase of the community action programme for education and training for techology, on the basis of funding of 200 mecus over five years to encourage Communitywide co-operation between higher level education and training institutions and industry in support of the development and application of new technologies. This was agreed by a majority vote on the assumption that the legal base was article 128. The United Kingdom voted against as in our opinion the legal base should have included article 235. Other member states also voted against. These states reserved the right to challenge the decision before the European Court of Justice. Consideration of a resolution on continuing training was deferred till the Spanish Presidency.

The Council was unable to reach agreement on a proposed directive to reverse the legal burden of proof so that it fell upon the employer in equal pay and equal treatment cases. However, a resolution was adopted on the reintegration and late integration of women into working life. This emphasises the importance of measures to help women return to paid work after time at home looking after their families.

An extension was agreed to a regulation providing financial assistance to Greece for vocational training centres, and centres for the rehabilitation of the mentally ill and mentally handicapped. There was also some discussion on family benefits for migrant workers.

SCOTLAND

Transplants

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State Scotland if he will make a statement on the shortfall between organs available for transplant and the need for such organs; and if he will indicate how many potential recipients are likely to die because donor organs are not available, over the most convenient period.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not possible to estimate how many patients are likely to die because donor organs are not available. The number of organs available for transplant fluctuates significantly from time to time. The balance between the need for organs and the number available also varies, depending also on such factors as whether a suitable match between recipient and donor can be found.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount of money still owed to the National Health Service in Scotland by patients who used private beds between 1979 and 1988; and how many beds are currently available for private hire.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As at 31 March 1988, a total of £92,706 was due to the National Health Service in Scotland for treatment given to private in-patients, and 113 beds are currently available for private hire.

Baby Bottle Feeds

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to alter the methods by which health boards purchase baby bottle feeds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no plans to alter the present purchase arrangements. A centralised United Kingdom contract was considered recently, but an analysis of tenders showed that there was little benefit to be gained by such an arrangement. The policy of the health Departments is to encourage all healthy mothers to breastfeed their babies, because breastfeeding provides the best infant nutrition.

Housing Starts

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public housing starts were made in Scotland in 1979 and in the latest year available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested was published in table 3 of Scottish Development Department statistical bulletin HSU No. 2 —"Housing Trends in Scotland 1987 Part 2". Copies of the bulletin were sent to all Members representing Scottish constituencies and are available in the Library.

Homelessness

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of households accepted as homeless by local authorities in Scotland in 1979 and the latest year available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of households accepted as homeless by local authorities was 7,443 in 1979-80 and 10,404 in 1986-87.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has for the number of people homeless in Scotland other than those accepted as such by local authorities, in 1979 and for the latest year available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on which any such estimate might be based is not collected centrally.

Housing (Expenditure)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was his Department's total expenditure on housing in 1979 and in the latest year available, at constant prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department's expenditure on housing at constant prices was £547 million in 1979-80 and £310·8 million in 1987-88. This calculation relates to those items of expenditure which occur in both years and can therefore be sensibly compared.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the total number of recorded crimes and (b) the total number of crimes committed against the person in 1979 and the latest year available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Crimes recorded: Scotland

	1979	1987
Total crimes	346,680	481,230
Crimes committed against the person[1]	14,698	23,616

[1] Comprises group 1 (non-sexual crimes of violence) and group 2 (crimes of indecency) of the Scottish Home and Health Department classification of crimes and offences.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total crime clear-up rate for Scotland, broken down by police authority area, in 1979 and the latest year available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Force	Percentage clear-up rate: crimes
	1979	1987
Central	37·6	48·8
Dumfries and Galloway	40·4	53·8
Fife	43·4	41·8
Grampian	37·4	31·5
Lothian and Borders	29·2	38·9
Northern	60·7	62·9
Strathclyde	25·6	29·3
Tayside	35·0	42·7
Scotland	30·0	34·9

Prisons

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of people held in prison in Scotland, both on remand and those serving a sentence, in 1979 and in the latest year available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Average daily prison population: Scotland

	1979	1987
Remand	691	938
Under sentence	3,891	4,509
Total[1]	4,585	5,446

[1] Includes also civil and court martial prisoners.

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of recorded uses of firearms by police in Scotland in 1979 and in the latest available year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There were two incidents in 1979 and four in 1987 during which firearms were used by the police in Scotland. On each occasion the firearms were used for the destruction of animals.

Island Schools (Mathematics and English)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in any report submitted since 1 January 1986 by Her Majesty's inspector of schools in respect of a primary school in Orkney or Shetland, adverse criticism has been expressed about the teaching of mathematics or English; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since 1 January 1986, reports by Her Majesty's inspectors of schools have been published on seven primary schools and departments in Orkney and Shetland. Each of the reports draws attention to certain weaknesses in the teaching of mathematics and of language within the context of its assessment of the work of the school as a whole. A copy of each report was sent to the hon. Member when it was published, and copies are also available in the Library.

Geese

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, and to what extent, he provides advice to landowners on methods that may justifiably be used to reduce or prevent the possibility of damage to grasslands or crops by Greenland white-fronted geese.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Landowners and occupiers are advised to undertake non-lethal scaring of Greenland white-fronted geese as the primary means of grassland or crop protection. Specific advice on the use of scaring devices is available from the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to issue licences under the provision of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for the purpose of shooting Greenland white-fronted geese during the winter in order to reduce or prevent serious damage to improved grassland and crops; and if he will state the number of applications and the number of guns in respect of each such application he has received to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Licences will be issued to reduce or prevent serious damage to improved grassland and crops only in cases where non-lethal scaring has proved ineffective in preventing such damage caused by this species.

Twenty applications have been received. Sixteen applicants have requested the use of two guns and the remainder one gun. No licence has yet been issued.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state (a) the criteria which his professional staff will apply in determining the extent of damage that has been, or would have been, caused by Greenland white-fronted geese in considering individual applications to shoot such geese this winter and (b) the number of professional staff employed for this purpose.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The criteria applied are the methods of non-lethal scaring used and their effectiveness, the number of geese involved and frequency of grazing, physical evidence of damage, loss of grazing to livestock due to geese grazing competition and expected loss of future grassland productivity which would result from uncontrolled grazing by geese. Two members of professional staff are employed in the assessments.

Sports Premises (Eastbank)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what offers, and from whom, and for what purpose, the Scottish Sports Council has received in respect of the premises formerly occupied by Actionsport, Scotland, in the Eastbank educational complex in Shettleston constituency.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. The premises were leased from Strathclyde regional council at a peppercorn rent and were returned to the owners on 30 November.

Local Health Councils

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the review of local health councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall consider the question of publication when I have received and studied the report I commissioned from the management consultants Arthur Young.

Mental Health Services

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by health board the amount of money spent on mental health services in each year since 1979, the percentage increase in real terms and the percentage of overall spending on health services, both in the National Health Service and the private sector.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 15 December 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) on 17 June at column 78. The table shows the percentage change in real terms between 1981-82 and 1986-87 and the percentage of overall spending on health services for 1986-87. There are no figures held centrally for private sector expenditure on mental health services.

Woodland Grant Scheme

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Moray of 5 December, Official Report, column 45, if he will break down the hectarage approved for planting and awaiting approval for planting under the woodland grant scheme into new planting and replanting.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 December 1988]: The information is as follows:

Timber

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the United Kingdom shortfall in timber and timber derivatives in volume terms for each year since 1980;

(2) what was the estimated trade deficit in timber and timber derivatives in constant prices for each year since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The shortfall in timber and timber derivatives in the United Kingdom in volume terms (wood raw material equivalent) and in constant prices was as follows:

Year	Volume (millions of cubic metres)	Value £(1987-88) millions
1980	32·4	2,900

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Allowances

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members employ (a) none, (b) one, (c) two, (d) three, (e) four and (f) more than four employees who are paid from the secretarial and office allowance.

Mr. Wakeham: As at 31 December 1988, the numbers of staff directly employed by Members and paid out of the office costs allowance are as follows:

	Number
(a) none	25
(b) one	196
(c) two	265
(d) three	121
(e) four	29
(f) more than four	12

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many of the 1,267 employees paid from the office costs allowances are married or otherwise related to their employer.

Mr. Wakeham: No record is held of the relationship between Members and their employees and therefore I am unable to give the hon. Member the information requested.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will estimate the cost to public funds in a full year of enabling each hon. and right hon. Member to call upon the services of (a) one full-time secretary and one assistant accommodated in London and (b) one full-time secretary and one assistant accommodated in each constituency, using average rental and other overhead costs; and what is the current annual cost to public funds of the office allowances to hon. and right hon. Members.

Mr. Wakeham: The office costs allowance, currently £22,588, is available to right hon. and hon. Members to enable them to meet the cost of making arrangements which suit their own individual requirements. Consequently, the level of salaries paid by individual right hon. and hon. Members to their employees varies widely, reflecting the differences in working hours, duties and regional variations in pay. Additionally, there is no common pattern of use of information technology, which, together with the differences in local arrangements for constituency offices, leads to greater variations in costs.

In the circumstances, no meaningful estimate of the cost of the services listed can be given.

The total of the office costs allowance payable from the House of Commons Vote in 1988-89 is estimated at £14,683,000.

Salmonella

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many cases of salmonella poisoning have been reported in the Palace of Westminster in each of the last 20 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: During the past 20 years there has been no incident of salmonella poisoning identified as originating from any source in this House. However, one incident of food poisoning, which occurred in May 1988 and affected some 85 persons, was attributed to an outbreak of salmonella poisoning in the House of Lords. I understand that a subsequent investigation identified the probable cause, and action designed to avoid a recurrence has been taken.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Hearing Aid Council

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the registrar of the Hearing Aid Council was appointed; and what is the duration of his appointment.

Mr. Forth: The appointment of the registrar of the Hearing Aid Council and all matters to do with his conditions and terms of service are the sole responsibility of the council. The present registrar was appointed in 1969.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Minister responsible for the Hearing Aid Council last consulted regarding his appointments to the council and the implementation of the code of practice in relation to audiological technicians.

Mr. Forth: The Department of Health was last consulted over appointments to the Hearing Aid Council in December 1987, the latest occasion on which a council position occupied by a member with specialised medical knowledge and—or audiological technical knowledge fell vacant.

The council's present code of practice was approved by the Secretary of State in 1984 following interdepartmental consultation, including with the then Department of Heath and Social Security. Implementation of the council's code of practice is a matter for the council itself.

Recycling

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he intends to introduce legislation to ensure the use of packaging materials designed for re-use and recycling.

Mr. Forth: The Department has no plans to introduce legislation to ensure the use of packaging materials designed for re-use and recycling.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what initiatives his Department is taking to encourage the production of recyclable materials and returnable packaging.

Mr. Forth: The DTI commissioned research in 1985 on design for recyclability. A report on the study which took two years to complete has recently been published and industry's response is awaited. Assistance on design and manufacturing is available under the Department's enterprise initiative.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what initiatives his Department is taking to encourage industry to invest in recycling processes.

Mr. Forth: The Department has undertaken a campaign built around a specially prepared video to make industry aware of the potential benefits of investing in recycling. In conjunction with this, there is a programme involving officials talking to selected groups which have a direct interest in waste management, making presentations to chambers of commerce and addressing conferences.

North Peckham Task Force

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the names of those businesses sponsored through the north Peckham task force business development fund which (a) are located outside the north Peckham task force area and (b) whose employees are resident outside the north Peckham task force area.

Mr. Forth: The names of businesses supported by the north Peckham task force business development fund and located outside, but close to the task force area are:

(1) Danielle
(2) Beauty At Its Best
(3) Eleanor Williams
(4) Pennie Ray
(5) The Patchwork Kids
(6) Chris Johnson
(7) Femi Anthony Oye
(8) Tojak
(9) Radford's Interior Metalwork
(10) Wedding Cakes
(11) Ara Security Strap
(12) *Arts and Crafts
(13) Rip It Up
(14) Good As New
(15) *Govella
(16) Mode 7
(17) *Screaming Now
(18) Mr. Lams Restaurant
(19) *El Vergel

*These businesses are located outside the north Peckham task force area, but proprietors live within the area.

Information on those businesses whose employees are resident outside the north Peckham task force area is not available.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many people trained on Brook Street Bureau courses sponsored by the north Peckham task force are residents of the north Peckham task force area.

Mr. Forth: To date, 11 north Peckham task force area residents have been trained in secretarial skills by Southwark college on behalf of the task force and Brook Street Bureau. In recognition of the difficulty of attracting task force residents, Brook Street has recruited extra staff to help with this work as well as counselling and job-hunting.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list, by project and by amount, the names of all groups funded by the north Peckham task force whose head office lies outside the north Peckham task force area.

Mr. Forth: The information is listed in the table. Although the head offices of these organisations are located outside the task force area, many have a strong local base.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many people trained on South East Adult Training courses sponsored by the north Peckham task force are residents of the north Peckham task force area.

Mr. Forth: Task force funding has assisted South East Adult Training to expand provision of training places in the area and to develop its curriculum. The training courses themselves are run on behalf of the Training Agency. So far, 85 task force area residents have attended the courses. The remaining trainees come from the surrounding areas. The task force is working with South East Adult Training to increase the numbers of trainees from the task force area.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by what method a project is submitted for funding by the north Peckham task force; if he will place a copy of the application form in the Library; and what are the procedures through which applicants find the outcome of their applications.

Mr. Forth: There is no set method or application form for task force funding. Potential project sponsors discuss their proposals with task force personnel. If the outline proposals meet task force objectives in terms of aims, targeting and cost, the project is then developed until it is suitable for approval. Sponsors will be told of the outcome of their applications by the task force, usually by means of a telephone call followed up by a letter.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications for funding from the north Peckham task force have been (a) received, (b) approved and funded, (c) approved and pending and (d) rejected.

Mr. Forth: There is no set method or application form for task force funding. Potential project sponsors discuss their proposals with task force personnel. If the outline proposals meet task force objectives in terms of aims, targeting and cost, the project is then developed until it is suitable for approval. There are therefore no records kept of the numbers of requests for funding received or rejected.

To date, a total of 84 project proposals have been approved and funded and 13 have been approved but not yet funded.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will specify the expenditure by the north Peckham task force development fund on each of the projects funded.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 22 December 1988]: This information is confidential. However, the total expended from the north Peckham task force business development fund to date is £127,650, of which £79,950 is in loans and £47,700 in grants. A total of 41 local businesses have benefited from development fund support.

London Greek Radio

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many times his Department has confiscated equipment held by London Greek Radio; where this equipment is now held; and if it will be returned to London Greek Radio.

Mr. Atkins: My Department's radio investigation service has seized equipment being illegally used by London Greek Radio on 151 occasions. The equipment when seized is held in a secure store and disposed of in accordance with section 83 of the Telecommunications Act 1984.

Footwear Imports

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the percentage of the British footwear market of imports from Korea and Taiwan for each of the last three years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The figures are as follows:

United Kingdom Footwear Market (SIC 4510)
Percentage (by value) taken by Imports from South Korea and Taiwan

	1985	1986	1987
South Korea	1·9	2·0	3·0
Taiwan	3·3	2·9	4·0

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many oral parliamentary questions he has answered by written reply because the question was not reached at Question Time, for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: A total of 443, for the period 1 January to 31 December 1988. This total includes 10 oral questions which were tabled for answer on days when the Department was not in the order of questions.

Coral Imports

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has regarding the importation of CITES-listed hard corals from the Philippines entering the United Kingdom during 1987 and 1988; whether any of the consignments were declared to be for scientific or educational purposes; what proportion of these corals was destined for the curio trade; and what proportion was imported live for the aquarium trade.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply. I will write to the hon. Member.

Task Force Expenditure

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will state the total Government expenditure by task forces required to safeguard the 4,000 jobs and facilitate the 20,000 training places specified in his answer to the hon. Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) of 26 October, Official Report, columns 289-90; and if he will specify how much of that expenditure and how many of the jobs and training places were in the north Peckham area.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The outputs referred to related to task force expenditure of some £31 million on around 900 projects. A total of £2 million of that figure related to north Peckham. As indicated in earlier answers to the hon. Member, the north Peckham task force does not seek to create jobs, but up to September 1988 had helped to create 1,055 training places for local people.

Task Force Initiative, Peckham

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many new jobs have been created by the task force initiative in Peckham;

(2) if he will list the new jobs created by the task force initiative in Peckham;

(3) what is the cost per job created by the north Peckham task force initiative in Peckham;

(4) how many further jobs he expects to be created as a direct result of the task force initiative in Peckham;

(5) how many of the new jobs created by the north Peckham task force have been filled by people resident in Peckham.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 2 December 1988]: I refer to my reply given to the hon. Member on 19 December at columns 19-21. The prime objective of the north Peckham task force is not to create jobs but to give local people appropriate skills to enable them to compete effectively for existing jobs in the buoyant London labour market.

WALES

Tobacco Industry

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, in the light of the publication by the Secretary of state for Scotland of tobacco manufacturing employment statistics, he will provide figures showing the decline in employment in the tobacco manufacturing industry in Wales for any period since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Statistics of Trade Act 1947 prohibits disclosure of statistical information that could be related to an individual concern or of statistics from which such information can be deduced.

CIVIL SERVICE

Foreign Office (Disbursements)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the £209,756 of disbursements made by his Department to the Foreign and Commonwealth office in 1987-88.

Mr. Richard Luce: Information additional to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 12 December 1988 at column 416 is not immediately available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

"Our Changing Schools"

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether the statement on page 13 of the document entitled "Our Changing Schools" that, by 1990, a system for giving all school leavers a record of achievement will have been set up, means that those leaving school from 1995 onwards will receive a record of achievement document;

(2) with reference to the Central Office of Information publication issued on behalf of his Department entitled "Our Changing Schools," whether the statement as given on page 15 that from September 1989, 11 to 16-year-olds will have to learn all national curriculum subjects, including a modern foreign language, is literally accurate; and whether the statement on page 13 that, by 1990, a system for giving all school leavers a record of achievement will have been set up, is literally accurate.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is currently considering the final report of the records of achievement national steering committee which offers advice on the scope and timing of national arrangements. The report will be published for consultation shortly. Decisions on national arrangements will be taken in the light of those consultations. Hon. Members will be kept informed of developments.

I regret that there is a misprint on page 15 of "Our Changing Schools". The passage should have stated that, from September 1989, 11 to 14-year-olds will have to learn all the national curriculum subjects, including a modern foreign language. The error has been put right in subsequent reprints.

As the booklet makes clear elsewhere, the national curriculum is being introduced in stages from September 1989. The requirement to study all the core and foundation subjects for a reasonable time up to the age of 16 will be phased in over subsequent years.

Teachers (Training)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is his policy on assessing the adequacy of proposals under section 62 of the Education Reform Act 1988 for the in-service training of teachers in a prospective grant-maintained school, with particular respect to the initial introduction of the national curriculum and the recent advice he has received from the National Curriculum Council and the School Examination and Assessment Council; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his policy on assessing the adequacy of proposals under section 62 of the Education Reform Act 1988 in the case of a secondary school with regard to arrangements for links with feeder schools, including links relating to the in-service training of teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Proposals will be considered on their merits, having regard to best practice generally.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether the underspend on in-service teacher training grants in 1987-88 shown in Class XII, Vote 1, subhead IZ, is or will be carried forward to another year; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing (a) the amount of grant in the Vote and (b) the amount of expenditure in each recent year on in-service teacher training grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Vote provision for the local education authority training grants scheme, which was introduced on 1 April 1987, is for the payment of grant to local education authorities, in response to claims submitted by those authorities in respect of training which they have provided. Vote provision for this purpose in 1987-88 was £105 million; the corresponding figure for 1988-89 is £130 million. The underspend of £25·6 million for 1987-88 appears mainly to reflect delays in submitting claims for training which took place in that year rather than a reduction in the anticipated volume of training. Late claims for 1987-88 continue to be paid as soon as possible after their submission from the Vote provision for the scheme.

Education Support Grants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is his policy on determining a ceiling for the amount of education support grants in 1990-91 as a percentage of any other amount or by any other formula; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether special purpose grants payable to grant-maintained schools for purposes equivalent to education support grants will be taken into account for the purpose of maintaining a ceiling to the total annual amount of education support grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: In the light of the Local Government Finance Act and the White Paper "A New Planning Total" (Cm 441), my right hon. Friend intends to amend existing legislation so as to bring arrangements for determining the size of the education support grant (ESG) programme in line with those for the larger in-service teacher training grant programme. He has agreed to meet the local authority associations very soon to discuss the size and content of the 1990-91 ESG programme. As the intention is that there will no longer be a statutory ceiling on the programme, the question whether equivalent grant to grant-maintained schools is within or outside that ceiling does not arise.

British Antarctic Survey

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what costs have been allocated to the construction of a new survey ship for the British Antarctic Survey; and when he expects to (a) call for tenders and (b) announce the award of a construction contract.

Mr. Jackson: The hon. Member will appreciate that, for reasons of commercial confidentiality, I cannot say at this time what funds have been allocated for the construction of a new research ship for the British Antarctic Survey.

Tenders for the construction of the vessel are currently being sought by the Natural Environment Research Council from five of the 30 shipyards that were originally sent an outline specification of requirements. Two of these five yards are in the United Kingdom. The tenders are due for return by 20 January 1989; an announcement will be made to the House about the placing of the contract in due course.

Animal Research Laboratories

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is his policy on providing additional funds for the upgrading of standards in animal research laboratories when this is known to be the direct result of higher safety or other operating standards imposed by legislation;

(2) whether, in determining the funding requirements of animal research laboratories within the public sector, he will take into account any additional direct costs imposed entirely as a consequence of enhanced security arrangements resulting from raids carried out on such laboratories with the object of disrupting, damaging or destroying their work.

Mr. Jackson: The total resources available for higher education and science are distributed taking into account the needs of individual institutions, but that distribution is not determined in detail by my Department.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many oral parliamentary questions he has answered by written reply because the question was not reached at Question Time, for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since January 1988, a total of 541 oral parliamentary questions have received written replies.

ILEA Adult Education Service

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has regarding the number of pensioners who currently make use of the Inner London education authority adult education service.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are informed by the Inner London education authority that in the academic year 1987-88, a total of 31,837 people over 60 years of age and living in the authority's area attended ILEA adult education classes. Information is not available as to how many of these people had retired from work, nor as to the additional number of enrolments by people over 60 living outside the ILEA's area.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what he estimates will be the effect on adult education within inner London of bringing the inner London education authority's adult education service into line with grant-related expenditure assessment levels.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for individual local education authorities to determine their provision and fee structure for adult education in the light of the resources available to them and their statutory responsibilities. This principle applies currently to ILEA and will apply to the inner London boroughs as education authorities from 1 April 1990.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Patrick Ryan

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has now reached a decision for the prosecution of Patrick Ryan under the Criminal Law (Jurisdiction) Act 1976 in Ireland.

The Attorney-General: I have nothing to add to the written answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 22 December 1988.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Attorney-General if he will seek to challenge the Irish Attorney-General's ruling on the extradition of Patrick Ryan in an Irish court; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: As I told the House on 14 December 1988 in answer to the private notice question tabled by the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser), I found it singularly surprising that the Irish Attorney-General denied the application on the ground of fair trial. The very recent Extradition (Amendment) Act 1987 does not provide that the Irish Attorney-General should satisfy himself on that score. There have been a number of commentaries in the Irish press questioning the legality of his decision. I am not persuaded, however, that the objective of securing the return of fugitive offenders would be served by my taking action in the Irish courts. The Government are making representations to the Irish Government concerning the forthcoming review of part III of the Extradition Act 1965, as amended by the 1987 Act.

Criminal Law Jurisdiction Act 1975

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General in how many cases the Criminal Law Jurisdiction Act 1975 has been used in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) Great Britain; and what are the numbers of those convicted or acquitted.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 19 December 1988 to my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook) at columns 94-96. All the trials in the United Kingdom of cases pursuant to the Criminal Jurisdiction Act 1975 in respect of offences allegedly committed in the Republic of Ireland have taken place in Northern Ireland.

Social Security Commissioners

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Attorney-General in how many cases leave to appeal to a social security commissioner was granted; and how many appeals were decided by the commissioner in each month since April 1987.

The Attorney-General: Leave to appeal to a social security commissioner may be granted by both chairmen of the lower tribunals and the commissioners. The figures requested are not readily available, but the Lord Chancellor's Department has prepared a best estimate of the figures requested on a quarterly basis based on information provided by the office of the social security commissioners, the office of the president of the social security appeals tribunal and the Department of Social Security.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Statistics

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest quarterly recorded crime figures for Derbyshire by the differing categories of crime; and what are the comparable figures for the previous quarter over the past five years.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the following table.

Notifiable offences recorded by offence group in Derbyshire police force area

Explosives Find, Battersea

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the explosives find in Northcote rise, Battersea, on 21 December;

(2) if he will make a statement on the shooting incident in Chatham road, Battersea, on 21 December.

Mr. Hurd: At approximately 11.30 pm on Tuesday 20 December 1988 an 18-year-old man attempted to break into a Renault motor car which was parked in Northcote road, Battersea. He broke the window of the car having disturbed a man sleeping in the rear seat who then shot him in the stomach. The assailant ran off in the direction of nearby Staplehurst court. The police were called to the scene and the man was taken by ambulance to St. George's hospital, Tooting, was treated for his injuries and has since been discharged. Police inquiries established that the assailant had entered a ground floor flat in Staplehurst court but when armed officers later entered the flat they found the premises empty. It was immediately evident that the flat was being used as a bomb-making factory. An initial search revealed a considerable quantity of the explosive Semtex, other bomb-making equipment, and a number of weapons and ammunition.

Police inquiries revealed that two men had been living in the flat and that they had escaped. The two men remain at large and the Metropolitan police are continuing their efforts to find them with the co-operation of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the An Garda Siochana. A man has been charged in connection with this investigation with conspiracy to cause explosions and withholding information about acts of terrorism.

The use of Semtex and the other equipment involved corresponds with previous finds of IRA explosives. There is no indication as yet of the means by which the explosives were brought into the country or their source.

Kincora Boys Home

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Sussex police as to all investigations conducted by the Sussex police into alleged paedophilic homosexual activities in the period between the appointment of Sir George Terry as chief constable of Sussex force and his assignments to investigate allegations relating to the Kincora boys home.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Mr. Albert Baker

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 15 December, Official Report, column 720, if he will provide details of the full review undertaken in February into the case of Mr. Albert Baker.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The review involved a full assessment of Mr. Baker's likely behaviour in prison in the event of his being transferred back to Northern Ireland. I do not think that it would be right to publish further details.

Security and Intelligence Services (Staff Counsellor)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects to receive a report from the staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services; and whether he will make it available to hon. Members.

(2) how many times since November 1987 he has met with the staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services; and what items were discussed.

Mr. Hurd: The arrangements for the staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services to report to me were set out by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in her reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) on 2 November 1987 at column 512. There has been no change to those arrangements. It is not proposed that the staff counsellor's reports should be published or that details should be given about how he discharges his responsibilities.

Broadcasting

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the introduction of subscription fees for British Broadcasting Corporation television to be technologically feasible; and what technology he expects to be deployed.

Mr. Renton: The technology for subscription television is already available in some forms and the BBC has started a downloaded night hours subscription service, in conjunction with British Direct Television providing information for the medical profession. Other forms of subscription technology are still being developed.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at what level he expects British Broadcasting Corporation subscription fees to be set; and whether there will be exceptions or reduced fees for (a) pensioners and (b) those on social security.

Mr. Renton: We envisage that the level of subscription fees will be for the BBC to determine, as will the decision whether or not to offer reduced fees to any category of subscriber.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of income he expects the British Broadcasting Corporation to raise by subscription in its first year of operation.

Mr. Renton: The extent and pace of the move towards subscription are a matter for the BBC to judge. The consequences for the level of the licence fee after April 1991 will be a matter for discussion with the Government as proposed in the White Paper.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the British Broadcasting Corporation will retain its public service broadcasting commitment after the introduction of subscriptions.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to our White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality" (November 1988, Cm 517), which makes clear our commitment to the continuation of the BBC as the cornerstone of public service broadcasting.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the rate at which the technological costs of broadcasting are increasing.

Mr. Renton: A wide range of different technologies is used in broadcasting, some of which are mature and some still developing. Although we do not regularly monitor changes in their cost, it is likely that the position varies from one technology to another, depending partly on the stage of development which they have reached.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will introduce safeguards to limit concentration of ownership of television stations.

Mr. Renton: Yes. Existing statutory safeguards are contained in the Broadcasting Act 1981 and the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984. Paragraphs 6.48 to 6.53 of our recent White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality" (November 1988, Cm. 517) made clear our determination that ownership in the independent sector should be widely spread, and sought views on a number of principles on which ownership rules in the proposed legislation might be based.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make an announcement about the establishment of community radio stations.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend anounced on 2 November 1988 that he had approved a proposal by the Independent Broadcasting Authority to establish 20 incremental radio stations. We understand that they expect to announce their decisions on the first five stations in the spring.

Firearms

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will, as a matter of urgency, introduce regulations under the Firearms Act to prohibit the issuing of firearms licences to persons convicted of criminal offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no power for the Secretary of State to make such regulations. Under the Firearms Act 1968 there is already prohibition for life from possessing firearms or ammunition for persons sentenced to terms of three years or more in preventive detention, imprisonment, corrective training or youth custody. For sentences of three months or more but less than three years, there is a prohibition for five years from the date of release. Where an applicant for a firearm or shotgun certificate has convictions for lesser offences, it is for the chief officer of police to determine, in each case, whether these justify the refusal of a certificate. There is a right of appeal against a chief officer's decision, to the Crown Court.

Official Secrets Legislation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to satisfy the conditions of the Court of Human Rights for admissible restrictions on the freedom of expression in his proposals for new legislation on official secrets.

Mr. Hurd: I am satisfied that the Bill is fully consistent with the provisions of the European convention on human rights.

Armenia (British Rescue Squad)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will investigate complaints of indiscipline among some members of the British rescue squad recently despatched to Armenia; and what further action he proposes to take.

Mr. John Patten: The question of discipline in respect of London Fire Brigade officers is a matter for the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority. I understand from the chief fire officer that the officers concerned have denied the allegations made in the media and that this has been accepted by the chief officer.

Her Majesty's inspector of fire services who led the team of London Fire Brigade officers has also denied these allegations of indiscipline. We accept this and have no plans to take any further action.

Arrests

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest available figures for (a) total arrests, (b) the total population and (c) arrests on a percentage of the population in England.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) on 7 December 1988.

Immigration

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases there have been in the last 12 months of Home Office and immigration service officials withdrawing previously granted residence permits from people who had allegedly entered the country by deception or by some other illegal method; in how many of these cases the accused persons sought to challenge this allegation; how many made representations to the Minister's office via hon. Members; and in how many cases where the Home Office or immigration service's decision was so challenged these challenges were upheld and the allegation from the official dismissed.

Mr. Renton: In 1988, 2,120 persons given leave to enter by an immigration officer were subsequently treated as illegal entrants. The rest of the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Accident and Emergency Services

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Salisbury dated 14 November 1988 on the subject of accident and emergency services.

Mr. John Patten: A reply was sent on 4 January.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many oral parliamentary questions he has answered by written reply because the question was not reached at Question Time, for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Hurd: Of the 590 oral parliamentary questions answered by Home Office Ministers in 1988, 465 received written replies because they had not been reached at Question Time.

Football Matches (Arrests)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of arrests at each football league ground for each club per home match for (a) the last season and (b) the current season to date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: For arrests last season I refer my hon. Friend to the reply from my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport to a question from the hon. Member for Derbyshire, East (Mr. Barnes) on 19 December 1988, columns 56-60. The Association of Chief Police Officers does not yet have complete figures for each ground in the first part of this season, but the provisional total of arrests up to 31 October 1988 is:

	Arrests
Division 1	672
Division 2	540
Division 3	287
Division 4	543
Total	2,042

Naturalisation

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have applied for (a) naturalisation and (b) registration as British citizens in each of the last five years and in each of the last 12 months; and what number of applications have been granted in each of these periods.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested. The numbers of applications for citizenship received in the nationality division, and the numbers granted, are set out in the table. The figures in the table do not include applications awaiting preliminary processing in the registry, of which there were approximately 110,000 at the end of November 1988.

[1] Statistics for 1988 are provisional.

Mr. Nigel Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he expects to reply to the response to the National Association of Probation Officers to his Green Paper "Punishment Custody and the Community"; and when he expects to meet officers of the Association to discuss the Green Paper.

Mr. John Patten: The Government will make its views known on the comments of the National Association of Probation Officers on the Green Paper "Punishment, Custody and the Community" when all such comments have been received and considered. The deadline for comments is 31 January. I have no immediate plans to meet members of NAPO again to discuss the Green Paper; I have met them on two occasions during 1988. They have promised further comments before the deadline and I await these with interest.

PRIME MINISTER

European Commission (Vice-President)

Q29. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her communications with the vice-president of the European Commission since his appointment on 1 January.

The Prime Minister: No.

Salmonella

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether the Government will compensate members of the public who have been poisoned by salmonella eggs and provide legal and other assistance for those who wish to claim damages against the egg producers in question.

The Prime Minister: No. Producers and suppliers of food owe a legal duty to care to the ultimate consumer of the food to ensure that the food is fit to eat. Those who have suffered food poisoning that is due to a breach of that duty by the producer or supplier would have a right to take action through the courts to obtain compensation.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether the majority of egg production enterprises with more than 1,000 laying hens are completely free of salmonella; and if she will publish in the Official Report figures showing the number of such enterprises and the number of official veterinary inspections carried out in 1987 and to date.

The Prime Minister: In 1988, a total of 20 cases of salmonella enteritidis were reported under the Zoonoses Order 1975. There are around 38,500 enterprises in Great Britain of which 2,052 have over 1,000 laying birds. Since April 1988, all reports of salmonella enteritidis in laying hens have been investigated by veterinary officers of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will take steps to ensure that no egg farmer is paid compensation directly or indirectly in respect of lost egg sales unless she is satisfied that the undertaking in question has not sold contaminated eggs in 1987 and that the hen flocks are now completely free of salmonella.

The Prime Minister: No. To take selective action against producers who have reported salmonella in the past would create a disincentive to the reporting of such problems in the future.

Sir Alan Walters

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Prime Minister when Sir Alan Walters will resume his duties as her economic adviser.

The Prime Minister: Sir Alan Walters is likely to return to public service around the middle of this year. The terms on which he will return are still under discussion.

Engagements

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 January.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 January.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 January.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 January.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 January.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 January.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 January.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 January.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Security Services (Staff Counsellor)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many times since November 1987 she has met the staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services; and what items were discussed;

(2) when she next expects to receive a report from the staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services; and whether she will make it available to hon. Members.

The Prime Minister: I set out the arrangements for the staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services to report to me in my reply to my hon. Friend the member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) on 2 November 1987 at column 512. There has been no change to those arrangements. It is not proposed that the staff counsellor's reports should be published or that details should be given about how he discharges his responsibilities.

Emergency Services

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister what is her policy towards privatisation of emergency services dealing with accidents; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government have no plans to change the basis on which these important services are currently provided.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what amounts for bad debts have been allowed for by her office in calculating the total costs of her visits abroad given in answers to questions by right hon. and hon. Members during the past three years.

The Prime Minister: No provision for bad debts has been made when calculating these costs.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will instruct her office to clear up all outstanding debts owed by media organisations for the cost of sending their representatives with her on overseas visits.

The Prime Minister: I am satisfied that the arrangements in force in my office for pursuing outstanding invoices operate effectively.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister why she will not identify those media organisations which have not settled their accounts for expenses arising from their representatives accompanying her on overseas visits; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 8 December 1988 at column 267.

Air Crash (Lockerbie)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister how many (a) heads of State and (b) Heads of Government contacted her to express sympathy following the air disaster at Lockerbie.

The Prime Minister: I have received over 25 messages of sympathy from Heads of State and Heads of Government following the tragic disaster at Lockerbie.

Parliamentary Answers (Cost)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister whether the level of £250 as the normal cost ceiling for the answering of a parliamentary question includes specific or notional staff costs arising from administration, research and delivery of the answer; and if she will provide an analysis of the costs associated with the answering of this question.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General gave on 28 July 1988 to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) at columns 497-98. It is not the practice to give an analysis of the costs of individual parliamentary questions.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister who determines the cost level beyond which a parliamentary question is referred to the responsible Minister before significant resources are committed; and what changes have been recorded in the cost levels, expressed at 1979 prices.

The Prime Minister: The cost level is kept under review by Her Majesty's Treasury. It was originally set at £50 in 1965, increased to £200 in 1982 and then further increased to £250 in 1988 to reflect increases in costs.

Electors

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will take steps to require the Boundary Commissions to equalise the number of electors per constituency in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Home Affairs Select Committee considered the disparities in the average electorates in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland in its report on the redistribution of seats (2nd Report, 1986-87). The Committee decided to make no recommendation aimed at rectifying these disparities and the Government accepted that conclusion.

Minister for Sport

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Prime Minister why the office of Minister for Sport is included within the Department of the Environment; and if she will set out in the Official Report the environmental considerations which the Minister for Sport is expected to take into account.

The Prime Minister: Since 1969 successive Governments have considered the appropriate location for the office of the Minister for Sport to be the Ministry of Housing and Local Government and subsequently, on its creation, the Department of the Environment. The Minister is, of course, responsible to the Secretary of State for the Environment. All Government funding specifically allocated to sport is channelled through the Sports Council. The Sports Council's priorities are determined by its royal charter.

Security Service Bill (Warrant Provisions)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her policy on any future application of the warrant provisions of clause 3 of the Security Service Bill to the property of right hon. and hon. Members.

The Prime Minister: If hon. Members have particular issues to raise, they should pursue them during further proceedings on the Bill.

Tourism

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will ensure that matters relating to tourism in Scotland and Wales are included in the current review of tourism policies.

The Prime Minister: The review is taking into account matters relating to tourism policy for Great Britain as a whole, in which the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales clearly have an interest. I have no plans to broaden the review to include the arrangements for tourism for which my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales are specifically responsible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EC (Luxembourg Agreement)

Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will state the occasions when the Luxembourg agreement has been invoked at any meeting of the European Council or Council of Ministers since July 1987.

Mrs. Chalker: Greece invoked the Luxembourg compromise in the Agriculture Council on 17 June 1988.

Security Services (Staff Counsellor)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when he expects to receive a report from the staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services; and whether he will make it available to hon. Members;

(2) how many times since November 1987 he has met the staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services; and what items were discussed.

Mr. Waldegrave: The arrangements for the staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services to report to me were set out by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in her reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wycome (Mr. Whitney) on 2 November 1987. There has been no change to those arrangements. It is not proposed that the staff counsellor's reports should be published or that details should be given about how he discharges his responsibilities.

Visa Applications

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his answer of 30 November 1988, Official Report, column 310, he will give the reasons for the level of refusals of entry clearance applications made in Jamaica in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Prior entry clearance for Jamaicans wishing to visit the United Kingdom is not mandatory and the majority travel without an entry certificate. Those applying for entry clearance at the High Commissions in Kingston tend to be the less straightforward cases many of whom are unable to meet the requirements of the immigration rules. Some 31,600 Jamaicans were admitted to the United Kingdom in 1987; 269 were refused leave to enter.

Malawi

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total value of orders placed with United Kingdom companies for services and goods for Malawi in the last year; and and if he will list them.

Mrs. Chalker: The total value of visible exports from the United Kingdom to Malawi for the 12 months to 30 November 1988 was £26·4 million. Figures for exports of services are not available.

Information on individual orders is not available, with the exception of orders placed by Crown Agents with United Kingdom firms using aid funds. In calendar year 1988 the total value of these orders was £1,712,208 and of orders placed directly by the ODA, £31,771·92. I will send the hon. Member the detailed information available.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions since July 1988 when representatives of Her Majesty's Government in the Council of Ministers of the European Economic Community were given notice by the presidency of that body to reach either a common policy or find agreement on a legislative proposal at less than one week's notice, together with details of the respective proposals, meetings and periods of notice given.

Mrs. Chalker: The presidency has, in accordance with the rules of procedure, circulated provisional agendas for each council meeting to the other members of the Council and to the Commission at least 14 days before the date of each meeting. Exceptions to this procedure can be made only by unanimous agreement of the Council.

A detailed analysis of all agenda items considered at more than 30 Council meetings could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present three meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned in January.

The Agriculture Council will be held on 23 January. It is likely that the following subjects will be discussed: income aids, reform of the beef (and possibly also the sheepmeat) regime, milk quotas, agrimonetary questions, aid to small cereals producers, tree nuts and possibly the labelling of spirit drinks. The Commission is also expected to introduce its 1989 price-fixing proposals.

The Foreign Affairs Council on 23/24 January will include a review of the dispute with the United States on hormones, preparations for the EC/ACP Council of Ministers meeting in Brazzaville on 16/17 February at which negotiations on a successor to the present Lomé convention will continue, and discussion of relations with the Council of Europe. There will also be further discussion of new financial protocols for Cyprus and Malta.

The Internal Market Council on 30 January will discuss further measures relevant to the completion of the single market.

Hong Kong (Endangered Species)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes have been made by the Hong Kong authorities in legislation following their review of measures designed to enforce their responsibilities under the convention on international trade in endangered species; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Hong Kong authorities have concluded that the following changes to existing Hong Kong legislation are desirable:

(i) To increase maximum fines by five times.
(ii) To tighten up transit requirements.
(iii) To ban the import, export and possession of medicinal products purporting to contain rhinoceros ingredients.
(iv) To make it an offence for persons to give false information when applying for endangered species licences.
(v) To overcome certain indentification difficulties by accepting labels and accompanying documents as evidence for prosecution.
(vi) To extend the power of search to cover any offence committed under the ordinance.
(vii) To empower the Government to release live endangered species or dispose of perishable specimens before relevant cases come to court.

Proposals to effect these changes will be included in a draft Bill which the Hong Kong Government intend to introduce into the Legislative Council during its present session.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many seizures of illegally imported endangered species were made by the Hong Kong authorities in the second six months period of 1988; how many seizures were made of similar categories intended for export; and if he will give details of all seizures made.

Mr. Eggar: During the second six-month period of 1988 the Hong Kong authorities made 186 seizures. Details of the seizures are:

Species/Parts	Quantity
	Illegal import	Illegal possession
Felidae (Cats):
Stuffed	1
Skin	7 pieces	4 pieces and 7·3 kg scraps
Deer Antlers:	110 kg	400 kg
Musk Pod:	1·5 kg	0·25 kg
Elephant:
Skin	23 pieces	17 pieces
Ivory	1,205 kg	—
Monkeys:	—	2
Rhinoceros:
Horn	—	1·5 kg
Hide	—	0·5 kg
Pangolin:
Meat	33·4 kg	—
Birds of Prey/Owl	15	—
Meat	0·4 kg	—
Parrots:	12	—
Reptiles:	409 pieces	—
Skins	3	—
Sea Turtle:	26	4
Giant Salamander:	8	5
Asiatic Bony Tongue:
Fish	4	—
American Ginseng:	2·6 kg	—

There were no seizures in respect of intended export.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many restaurant inspections were carried out by the Hong Kong authorities in the second six-month period of 1988 to ensure that no rare or engangered species of animals and plants were offered for sale as food; and if any seizures were made.

Mr. Eggar: The Hong Kong authorities carried out 170 inspections of restaurants during this period. Two sea turtles were seized during these inspections.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the operation to date of the Animals and Plants (Protection of Endangered Species) Ordinance (Replacement of Schedules) Order 1988 made by the Hong Kong Executive Council on 26 July 1988 in respect of the import of elephant tusks.

Mr. Eggar: The Animals and Plants (Protection of Endangered Species) Ordinance (Replacement of Schedules) Order 1988 came into effect on 5 August 1988. It extended the import control of ivory to all worked items. Up to 7 January 1989, 39 shipments totalling 510 kg of worked ivory items have been seized. During the same period, 133 shipments totalling 4,752 kg of worked ivory from CITES approved sources have been imported under valid licences.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on whether the ban by the Hong Kong Government on the internal sale of medicinal products containing rhino horn will also include a ban on the export of such products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The proposed ban on medicinal products claiming to contain rhinoceros horn ingredients will cover their import, possession and export.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many prosecutions were initiated by the Hong Kong authorities in 1988 arising from illegal imports, exports and possession of endangered species.

Mr. Eggar: Two hundred and ninety eight.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any auctions are impending in Hong Kong of animal tusks, skins and antlers seized by the authorities.

Mr. Eggar: The Hong Kong authorities will shortly seek tenders for the sale of certain confiscated items which are permitted for commercial trade under CITES. These items include elephant tusks, skins of felidae (cat), reptiles, chinchilla and others, and deer antlers.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress made by the Hong Kong Government in banning the internal sale of medicinal products containing rhino horn.

Mr. Eggar: The necessary legislation is being drafted for introduction into the Hong Kong Legislative Council during its present session.

Niger (Illegal Hunting)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Saudi Arabia regarding illegal hunting by Saudi nationals in Niger; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. This is a matter for the Government of Niger.

Aircraft (Sabotage Threats)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department was notified in December 1988 of possible sabotage threats to Pan Am flights from Europe to the United States.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any notices of possible sabotage threats to aircraft flights were issued to diplomatic staff in December 1988 which were not also available to the travelling public.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Fauna, Flora and Habitats (Protection)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the provisions of the draft European Community directive on the protection of fauna, flora and habitats extends to Gibraltar.

Mrs. Chalker: Yes.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Rescue Teams

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether he will consider proposing international action to improve the level of training and co-ordination of rescue teams dispatched to major disasters, in the light of recent experience in Armenia;

(2) if he has any plans to improve the level of training, co-ordination and equipment for British rescue teams, in the light of recent experience in the earthquake rescue operation in Armenia.

Mr. Chris Patten: The expertise of the relief teams in Armenia was impressive and they had the best equipment that they could take with them. Co-ordination was in the hands of the Soviet authorities. But I am considering all aspects of the international relief operation to see whether lessons can be learnt for future emergencies.

Sub-Saharan Africa (Aid)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table listing the total amount in constant 1988 prices of all United Kingdom official aid flown to sub-Saharan Africa from 1979 to 1988.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total amount of aid given by Her Majesty's Government to sub-Saharan Africa in 1979 and 1988, or the latest year for which figures are now available in constant 1988 prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: Gross British bilateral aid to sub-Saharan Africa from 1979 to 1987, at 1987 prices, was as follows:

	£ million
1979	386
1980	369
1981	379
1982	296
1983	271
1984	287
1985	310
1986	280
1987	284

Figures for 1988 are not yet available.

Armenia (Earthquake)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will give a breakdown of how the £5 million aid to Armenian earthquake victims will be spent.

Mr. Chris Patten: Some £1·4 million has been allocated so far, in response to specific requests from the Soviet authorities for assistance with emergency relief and search and rescue measures. This has included:

(a) 12 relief flights carrying tents, clothing, medical supplies, food and heavy earthmoving equipment, in collaboration with the British Red Cross Society;

(b) a team of four London firemen with specialist search equipment;
(c) a team of eight Manchester doctors specialising in crush injury treatment;
(d) a contribution to a food parcel programme by CARE Britain:
(e) supply and transport of containers to move donated clothes and equipment to Soviet provided ships;
(f) supply of heaters for prefabricated housing.

The remaining £3·6 million will be used for rehabilitation and reconstruction.

Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to provide new aid in support of the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference.

Mr. Chris Patten: We shall continue to give the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC) our full support. I have, for example, just approved a further £15 million contribution for the Limpopo railway rehabilitation project. I plan to attend the SADCC annual conference in Luanda in February 1989.

Animal Conservation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the total amount spent by his Department in each of the last five years on schemes in support of animal conservation.

Mrs. Chalker: Total expenditure on animal conservation is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Records are available for expenditure in the last three years under the Overseas Development Administration's joint funding scheme with British voluntary agencies. The following projects aimed at conserving wildlife habitats have been supported:

	1986-87 Actual £	1987-88 Actual £	1988-89 Projected £
Cameroon
Korup national park	80,500	140,000	205,000
Mount Oku mountain forest	—	—	35,000
Liberia
Sapo park	—	—	35,000
Zambia
Wetlands	—	—	50,000
Nepal
Annapurna protected area	—	—	14,750

In addition, as my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development told the hon. Member on 19 October 1988, at column 857, wildlife conservation has been supported under the bilateral aid programme in Kenya and Zimbabwe. Other ODA assistance includes vehicles for a game park in Tanzania and an expert for the King Mahendra Trust which promotes conservation in Nepal.

United Nations

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many member states of the United Nations organisation are democracies.

Mr. Eggar: Under the United Nations charter membership of the United Nations, in addition to and including founder members, is open to all peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present charter and, in the judgment of the organisation, are able and willing to carry them out. The United Nations does not attempt to categorise its members as democracies or otherwise.

ENVIRONMENT

Greenhouse Effect

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has initiated any evaluation of the eight-point plan put forward to halt the global warming greenhouse effect, presented by Dr. Robert Goodlad to the major project and the environment conference at the Royal Geographical Society on 14 November.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Most of the points raised by Dr. Goodlad have already been addressed in the Government's response to the Brundtland report, "Our Common Future" and in my noble Friend's message to the Toronto conference, "The Changing Atmosphere", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. The Government are giving full support to the UNEP/WMO inter-government panel on climate change, including leading the science review working group, as the most important means of seeking a way forward on an issue which must be tackled internationally.

Football Clubs (Membership Schemes)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what comments he has received from the Police Federation regarding compulsory identity cards for football supporters.

Mr. Moynihan: I met the chairman and representatives of the Police Federation on 15 December and had a helpful discussion about the proposal for a national membership scheme for football supporters. It was agreed that further meetings would be held as the detail of the scheme is worked out.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many football supporters he estimates will apply for identity cards should the proposed legislation on identity cards for football supporters be enacted.

Mr. Moynihan: I hope that every genuine football supporter, regular or casual will recognise the benefits of the national membership scheme and apply for membership.

Pollution (Safety Standards)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what safety standards are laid down to minimise health risks to the public from polluted rivers, lakes and reservoirs.

Mr. Moynihan: Rivers and estuaries are already subject to classification schemes which incorporate standards relating to amenity and uses for the waters concerned. These schemes are being reviewed as part of the Government's proposals to introduce a statutory framework of water quality objectives for rivers and estuaries.

Contact Pursuits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the last national survey was carried out regarding the suitability of United Kingdom inland waters for contact pursuits; and whether a survey is planned for the near future.

Mr. Moynihan: There has been no national survey of inland waters with respect to their suitability for contact pursuits; nor are there plans for one. Monitoring of rivers is currently a matter for the water authorities but will, under our privatisation proposals, become one of the main functions of the National Rivers Authority.

Radon Radiation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the national average of Radon radiation concentrations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A national survey carried out by the National Radiological Protection Board found an average concentration of 20·5 becquerels per cubic metre of air in dwellings.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the design level for buildings in a Radon radiation area.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's advisers on radiological protection matters, the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB), recommended that exposure to radon daughters in the home should be limited to 5 millisieverts a year. The design level, which was recommended by the NRPB, reflects international consensus on this matter as well as the views of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution.

Control of Pollution

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has inspected the site used by contractors acting on behalf of Tesco Stores at Petersfinger near Salisbury.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution has not inspected the site but is aware of the situation. The matter is one for local planning and waste authorities, both of which are taking the necessary action.

The Orphanage, Watford

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the selling price and method of valuation for the sale of The Orphanage, Watford to Heron Homes.

Mr. Chope: The Orphanage, Watford is not owned by the Department of the Environment or by any Government Department. A leasehold interest held by the Department of the Environment expired on 25 December 1988.

East Thameside (Housing)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretry of State for the Environment what account he will take of the observations of London borough councils on the study by Messrs. Coopers and Lybrand on the east Thameside housing and of the strategic implications of any of the site schemes on transport, education and other personal services.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend is taking careful account of the comments received from the London boroughs.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the properties and housing units designated as affordable on each of the sites in the London borough of Newham considered in the east Thameside housing study, stating the approximate level of income required under current conditions to purchase two bedroom affordable accommodation.

Mr. Trippier: The study considered general price levels of houses of varying types at the lower end of the east London owner-occupier market. It was not required to designate specific properties or dwellings within the study areas as affordable.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the density in both habitable rooms per acre and persons per acre in each of the sites in the London borough of Newham reported on in the east Thameside housing study, together with comparable figures approved by him applicable to public and private housing, respectively, within the area of the modified Beckton district plan.

Mr. Trippier: The consultants were asked to consider standard densities for housing and development at Stratford rail yards, Beckton gas works and the lower Lea valley of approximately 90, 100, and 120 habitable rooms per acre net respectively—not densities on the basis of persons per acre.

My right hon. Friend is not required to approve the modified Beckton local plan.

Nature Conservation

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet received the report from the Nature Conservancy Council on the desirability and feasibility of privatising the 109 national nature reserves currently owned or part owned by the Nature Conservancy Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received the report of the Nature Conservancy Council's review of national nature reserves at the end of December. The report is now under consideration and a further announcement will be made in due course.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker), Official Report, 2 December 1988, column 424, if he will list the reasons why the 117 sites of special scientific interest, reported by the Nature Conservancy Council in its 14th annual report as having been damaged, were not protected from potentially damaging operations; and how many of these cases have resulted in legal proceedings being taken against alleged offenders.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that the main specific causes of damage were as follows:

	Number
Third party operators (including works outside an SSSI)	43
Resulting from, or ancillary to, planning permissions	14
Works under Channel Tunnel Act 1988	2
Emergency electrical repairs	1
Unforeseen consequences of pre-1981 nature reserve agreement	1
Miscellaneous operations	56

Many of the latter cases will have involved unwitting damage although in six cases the NCC has initiated legal proceedings.

As the NCC's annual report makes clear, in 79 cases the damage to the SSSI was only short term, from which the site may be expected to recover. This may also apply where a site has suffered long-term damage. In only 11 cases was the damage severe enough to result in the denotification of part of the SSSI.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cars provided for the Secretary of State for Scotland and Ministers in his Department are capable of taking unleaded petrol; and how many of them still take leaded petrol only.

Mr. Chope: The Government car service currently provides three official cars to the Scottish Office which are allocated as follows:

Secretary of State—Rover 820 SE
Ministers of State—Austin Rover Montego
Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State—Austin Rover Montego

The Rover 820 SE is capable of running on lead-free petrol. Both Montegos are capable of running only on leaded fuel and cannot be converted. The older of the Montegos is to be replaced this month by a Montego capable of running on unleaded petrol and I hope that the other Montego will be replaced later this year.

Bellwin Scheme

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet a delegation from the north east Derbyshire district council to explore the possibilities of their receiving financial assistance towards the cost of putting out the underground fire at Callywhite lane, Dronfield under the terms of the Bellwin scheme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Bellwin scheme is intended to make available special financial assistance to local authorities to meet expenditure incurred in the immediate aftermath of an emergency to protect life or property. The underground fire in Dronfield had been burning for three years before any action was taken and it cannot be regarded as an emergency under the scheme. Furthermore the courts have established that liability for the fire rests with the landowners, from whom costs could be recovered.

Computerisation

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities who have computerised their search facilities for home buyers.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not collected centrally. However, I understand that Plymouth and Portsmouth city councils and Wigan metropolitan borough council have computerised their search facilities, and that a number of other authorities are currently exploring the possibility.

Palace of Westminster

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the chandeliers within the Palace of Westminster which survived the bombing in 1941 are of the same size and design as those which hung in the Chamber and which were destroyed.

Mr. Chope: I hope that it will be possible to answer this question when the investigations referred to in my reply to the hon. Member's question of 13 December, Official Report, column 523, have been completed.

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the cleaning and restoration of the Victoria Tower is to be completed.

Mr. Chope: The restoration, repair and cleaning of the stonework of the Palace of Westminster is being carried out in a number of phases. The current phase, covering the Central Lobby Tower, is scheduled for completion towards the end of the year. Work on the Victoria Tower is scheduled to start early in 1990 and will take about two and a half years to complete.

Council Housing (Sales)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the council housing stock as at 1 January 1980 had been sold under the right to buy legislation by the latest available date in (a) each district of Somerset, (b) each district of Devon, (c) each district of Dorset, (d) each district of Wiltshire, (e) the London borough of Camden, (f) the London borough of Islington, (g) the London borough of Lambeth, (h) the London borough of Southwark, (i) Birmingham, (j) Manchester, (k) Bradford, (l) Leeds, (m) Sheffield, (n) Nottingham and (o) Bristol.

Mr. Trippier: A table giving the available figures up to June 1988, as reported by each English local authority, has been placed in the Library.

Medicinal Leech (Protection)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites in the United Kingdom which meet the criteria for designation as special protection areas for the medicinal leech, Hirudo medicinalis, under the draft Fauna, Flora and Habitats directive; and if he will list the provisions which already exist for the protection of this species and its habitat.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Nature Conservancy Council has notified as sites of special scientific interest under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 eight sites at which the medicinal leech has been recorded since 1960. These are:

Dungeness
New Forest
Moccas park
Walland marsh

Bookham (Surrey)
Cors Goch
Ardmore, Kildalton and Callumkill woodlands
Clais Dhearg

Other sites may be designated in due course.

The medicinal leech as a species was afforded full protection in Great Britain from March 1988 by its inclusion in schedule 5 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, as amended by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 (Variation of Schedules) Order 1988. International trade in the medicinal leech is regulated by inclusion in appendix 2 of the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora.

It would be premature to speculate on what criteria for habitat and species protection might eventually be included in an agreed EC directive on habitat protection.

Hayle Harbour

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether an article 10 direction under the Town and Country Planning General Development order 1977 is currently in force in respect of the future development of Hayle harbour, Cornwall.

Mr. Chope: No.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will investigate the likely impact of the proposals contained in the Hayle Harbour Bill on (a) the Hayle estuary site of special scientific interest, (b) the hydrology of the estuary and (c) the ecology of Copperhouse creek and pools; and if he will consider the likely impact on the environment resulting from the increase in recreational use of the area resulting from the proposed development.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand the promoters of this private Bill are preparing an environmental impact assessment. The Nature Conservancy Council, which is statutorily responsible for all negotiations on matters affecting sites of special scientific importance, are in consultation with the promoters on this and the hydrology of the estuary and Copperhouse pools.

Local Authorities (Economic Development)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the economic development initiatives announced in his answer to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 21 December will affect facilities available under the city grant initiative for deficit funding.

Mr. Trippier: No. City grant, which is paid directly by my Department to private sector developers meets the shortfall between the market value and the capital costs of appropriate private sector development projects. It does not cover a company's trading deficits or running costs.

Toxic Waste (Exports)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the export of toxic waste from Britain by other national governments.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Scheduled Monuments (Damage)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many scheduled monuments have been damaged in each of the last five years as a result of each of the following activities: (a) agriculture, (b) forestry, (c) activities given planning permission, (d) activities of statutory undertakers and other public bodies not included in (a), (b) or (c), (e) recreation activities and (f) miscellaneous activities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have asked the chairman of English Heritage to provide the hon. Member with such information as is readily available for England. Information on monuments in Wales and Scotland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland respectively.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many oral parliamentary questions he has answered by written reply because the question was not reached at Question Time, for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Ridley: The total number of oral parliamentary questions answered by written reply during the last 12 months was 597.

Protection of Birds

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many seabirds have been affected by the oil pollution in the Channel caused by dumping or cleaning in early January 1989; who was responsible for the pollution; and what support has been given by Her Majesty's Government to organisations involved in rescuing the birds.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is too early to assess the full impact of the oil pollution in the Channel on sea birds. Oiled birds are continuing to come ashore. It may not yet be possible properly to assess the damage caused to sea bird populations. The Department of Transport is investigating the incident, but it has not been possible to identify the cause of the oil slick.

The organisations which are most involved in rescuing the birds are the RSPCA and the RSPB. Neither body has asked for Government assistance.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many licences for the killing of dark-bellied brent geese have been issued by his Department in the past three years; and how many birds have been slaughtered;

(2) what efforts are made by his Department to sponsor the setting aside by farmers of special feeding grounds for geese and other crop-eating birds.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food issues licences permitting the killing of limited numbers of dark-bellied brent geese as an aid to scaring operations to protect crops from serious damage. The position is reviewed each year and advice is taken from the Nature Conservancy Council.

The geese overwinter during the period October to March and details of licences issued and numbers killed during the last three seasons in England are given in the table. No licences are issued in either Scotland or Wales.

Licences Issued

Season	Number	Maximum number of geese permitted to be shot	Number of geese shot
1985-86	89	1,095	932
1986-87	72	1,200	550
1987-88	56	970	399
Total	217	3,265	1,881

Family Statistics

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the number of (a) married couples living in households headed by another adult, and (b) single-parent families living in households headed by another adult, according to local authority housing investment programme returns, for 1979 and the latest year available.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The estimates requested for 1988 are given in columns B3A1 (married couple) and B3B1 (lone parent) of the "HIP1 all items print" which is available in the Library. No comparable estimates were collected in 1979.

Homelessness

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the total number of households accepted as homeless by local authorities in 1979 and in the latest year available;

(2) what estimate he has for the number of people homeless in England other than those accepted as such by local authorities for the purposes of the Homeless Persons Act 1977 in 1979 and for the latest year available.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The estimated numbers of households for whom English local authorities accepted responsibility to secure accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act were 57,200 in 1979 and 112,400 in 1987. However, because of changes in the reporting system in 1980 and 1982, the figure for 1979 is not strictly comparable with those for later years.

In addition authorities reported 56,000 homeless households in 1987 to whom they gave advice and assistance but for whom they did not accept responsibility for securing accommodation. Comparable estimates are not available for 1979.

Offensive Trades

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the list of offensive trades that are registered with his Department.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Offensive trades are not registered with this Department. Those that require local authority consent under the Public Health Act 1936 are listed in schedule 14 of the Local Government Act 1972. In addition, a local authority by an order under section 107(1)(b)(ii) of the 1936 Act, confirmed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and published in accordance with his directions, may declare any other trade, business or manufacture to be an offensive trade in the whole or part of its district.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many premises which carried out offensive trade operations have been closed down since 1974; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many premises are used for the carrying out of offensive trades and if he will make a statement;

(3) what informaton he has as to how many premises operating offensive trades are in breach of the consents granted to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 December 1988]: This information is not available.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the statutory powers relating to the control of the emission of smells by ofensive trade operators; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: [holding answer 22 December 1988]: These powers are contained in part III of the Public Health Act 1936 and are as follows:

(i) Sections 92 to 100 of the 1936 Act enable a local authority to take action for the abatement of smell nuisance caused by offensive trades.

(ii) Section 107 of that Act requires the consent of the local authority to be obtained to the establishment of an offensive trade.

(iii) Section 108 of that Act enables a local authority to make byelaws with respect to offensive trades in their district.

A consultation paper published in December 1986 proposed that the provisions mentioned at (ii) and (iii) above should be replaced by a new system under which the establishment of an offensive trade would require the prior consent of the local authority. The consent would include details of the best practicable means to be used for controlling odour nuisance. A further consultation paper published in December 1988 contained a suggested definition of the trades which would require such consent.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he gives to local authorities about prosecution of managers of offensive trade operations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Departmental circular 43/76 issued on 7 May 1976 gives advice on how to deal with smell nuisance including local authorities' powers of prosecution of offenders under section 100 of the Public Health Act 1936.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has issued any guidelines for members of the public to register complaints against existing operators of an offensive trade.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 December 1988]: No specific guidance has been issued. The Department's circular No. 43/76 on "Control of Smells From the Animal Waste Processing Industry" advises local authorities to consider the establishment of community liaison committees which will include representatives of residents in the area where there are particular premises which create odour problems.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he intends to seek to amend the appropriate legislation relating to offensive trades which are creating smells; and if he will make a statement;

(2) under what circumstances he proposes that the requirement of prior consent will apply to people who operate in the offensive trade industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 December 1988]: In a consultation document issued in December 1986 entitled "Air Pollution Control in Great Britain—Review and Proposals," it was proposed that any person wishing to establish any trade deemed to be an offensive trade will require the prior consent of the local authority.

A further consultation paper published in December 1988 contained a suggested change in the definition of trades which would require such consent. These are trade in which:

(a) any animal, bird, fish or vegetable matter is processed, stored, or dried through the application of heat, for trade or profit in a manner which is likely to give rise to the evolution of offensive substances or odours, subject to the exclusion of:—
  (i) plants for the manufacture of pet foods;
  (ii) plants for the manufacture of food or drinks for human consumption;
  (iii) activities taking place on a farm not involving the manufacture of a product for sale; or

(b) the breeding of maggots from putrescible matter is carried out.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals he has received from owners of offensive trade plants where prior consents have been refused by the inspectorate or a local authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 December 1988]: None. Appeals where prior consent has been refused by a local authority are made to a magistrates court under section 107(4) of the Public Health Act 1936. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is not involved in issuing prior consents under the present system.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what representations he has received from local authorities about offensive trades asking him to amend the relevant legislation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what responses he has received to the consultation paper published in December 1986 on the review of air pollution controls in Great Britain, with particular reference to the offensive trades and emission of smells into the air; and if he will make these responses available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The responses received on these matters, including representations made by local authorities, are summarised in "Air Pollution Control in Great Britain—Follow-up to Consultation Paper issued in December 1986" published by the Department on 15 December 1988. A copy of this document has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

City Grant

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is considering any alterations to the priority areas for city grant.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 22 December 1988]: We have it in mind to look again at the list of priority areas for my Department's inner city programmes, including city grant, in the course of next year.

Mink Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what rates are payable on mink farms; and what are the arrangements for these establishments after the introduction of the uniform business rate.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Mink farms are currently liable for general rates and will be liable for the business rate from 1 April 1990.

Destroyed Chickens (Disposal)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance has been given to local authorities concerning the disposal of destroyed chickens.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 December 1988]: HM inspectorate of pollution has not issued general guidance concerning the disposal of destroyed chickens.

Local waste disposal authorities are best placed to offer advice on the availability of waste disposal facilities for animal carcasses.

HM inspectorate of pollution, as always, is prepared to assist if requested.

Irish Sea (Pollution)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites have received consent to discharge any of the following substances into the Irish sea for the year 1987-88: (i) phosphate, (ii) arsenic, (iii) lead, (iv) nickel, (v) chromium, (vi) zinc, (vii) manganese, (viii) cadmium, (ix) copper, (x) uranium, (xi) fluoride, (xii) mercury, (xiii) halogenated hydrocarbons, (xiv) pcb's, (xv) organo chlorines, (xvi) dioxins, and (xvii) organo phosphates.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department collects information on discharges of a limited number of these substances in connection with the reporting requirements of European Community directives. The number of sites known to be discharging these substances into the Irish sea and its tidal estuaries is as follows:

cadmium—12 sites
mercury—five sites
halogenated hydrocarbons: carbon tetrachloride—one site organochlorines: HCH, DDT, PCP—no sites.

Information on discharges of the other substances listed is not held centrally. The public registers maintained by water authorities in England and Wales, river purification boards in Scotland and the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland contain details of all authorised discharges of sewage and trade effluent.

Sports Council

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a copy of the policy document of the Sports Council entitled "Sport in the Community—The Next Ten Years".

Mr. Moynihan: A copy of "Sport in the Community —The Next Ten Years" was sent by the Sports Council to my predecessor when it was published in 1982.

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he complied with his undertaking in line 13 of column 1294, Official Report, 16 December, to draw to the attention of the Sports Council the need not to involve itself in unpopular schemes that are damaging to the environment; when he expects a reply from the Sports Council; and if he will copy the correspondence to the hon. Member for Twickenham.

Mr. Moynihan: I wrote to the members of the Sports Council on 5 January. The hon. Member received a copy of the letters.

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in the light of his statement in the Official Report, 16 December, column 1292, he has received notification from the Sports Council that a final decision has been taken on the Teddington floodlight scheme.

Mr. Moynihan: The Sports Council is not required to notify the Department of decisions to grant aid projects of this size, but I understand that the council gave approval to a grant of £100,000 towards the project on 9 January.

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, following his undertaking to convey the contents to the chairman of the Sports Council, he will make it his policy to seek from the Sports Council a full reply to the speech of the hon. Member for Twickenham in the Adjournment debate on 16 December.

Mr. Moynihan: No. I replied to the Adjournment debate on 16 December.

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when, following his undertaking in line 2, column 1294, Official Report 16 December, he personally sent a copy of the 16 December Adjournment debate to each member of the Sports Council.

Mr. Moynihan: My letters of 5 January to the members of the Sports Council enclosed a copy of the Hansard record of the Adjournment debate.

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Her Majesty's Government accept the policy of the Sports Council in its policy document, "Sports in the Community—The Next Ten Years", with specific reference to the interests and the needs of non-users.

Mr. Moynihan: "Sport in the Community—The Next Ten Years" was published by the Sports Council in 1982. The Sports Council, which was established by royal charter, is independent of the Government.

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice has been given to the Sports Council with regard to the extent to which it should take into consideration the environmental impact of projects which it supports; and if he will make a statement in the light of the Sports Council's own declared policy to take into account the interests of non-users.

Mr. Moynihan: It is for the Sports Council to decide whether or not to give grant aid to a project in the light of all the relevant information available.

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what form the provision of funding for the Sports Council is laid before Parliament; at what intervals; and when this is next due to take place.

Mr. Moynihan: Parliament is informed of the funding requirements for the Sports Council through the Autumn Statement made by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, through the public expenditure White Paper and through the normal Supply procedure.

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in the Official Report the length of time for which the chairman, the vice-chairman and the members of the Sports Council are appointed; and if he will give the dates to which the current appointments are to run in each case.

Mr. Moynihan: The chairman of the Sports Council is appointed for a term not exceeding five years. The vice-chairman and the other members are appointed for terms not exceeding three years. In all cases they are eligible for re-appointment. The terms of office of the current members of the council expire on the following dates:

	Date
John Smith (chairman)	19 May 1989
Sebastian Coe (vice-chairman)	9 July 1989
J. Allan Patmore (vice-chairman)	31 August 1990
Raymond Miquel	15 November 1991
John Powell	31 March 1990
Ron Emes	9 March 1990
Richard Fox	27 October 1991
Margaret Hohman	27 October 1991
Norman Jacobs	27 October 1991
Tim Marshall	27 October 1991
Charles Palmer	27 November 1989
Mary Peters	27 October 1991
David Simon	27 October 1991
Peter Yarranton	27 October 1991

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many communications he received from the Sports Council board members or officials concerning the Teddington floodlight scheme; and if he will list them by date.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has received one letter from the Sports Council concerning the Teddington floodlight scheme dated 2 December 1988.

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will extend his undertaking personally to convey to every member of the Sports Council the views put by the hon. Member for Twickenham in the Adjournment debate on 16 December to every member of the London Regional Sports Council.

Mr. Moynihan: The chairman of the London Council for Sport and Recreation is a member of the Sports Council. I made him aware of the hon. Member's concerns in my letter of 5 January. It is for him to convey this to other members of the London Council for Sport and Recreation.

Football Clubs (Membership Scheme)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will exclude from the ambit of proposed legislation involving identity cards for football supporters clubs at which there were no arrests during the 1987-88 season.

Mr. Moynihan: No. To exempt any League club from the national membership scheme could make that club a target for hooligans banned from those to which the scheme applied.

Thames Water Authority

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total consumption of water for each year since 1979 for domestic and commercial consumers in the Thames Water Authority area.

Mr. Moynihan: Information in the form requested is not available. However, since 1979-80 the amount of water supplied to all consumers in the Thames Water Authority area has been as follows:

Year (April/March)	Water Supplied (thousand cubic metres per day)
1979-80	3,563·43
1980-81	3,570·13
1981-82	3,580·61
1982-83	3,626·09
1983-84	3,782·22
1984-85	3,811·72
1985-86	3,818·39
1986-87	3,932·69
1987-88	3,960·56

These figures represent the daily average for each year and include water supplied by the statutory water companies operating within the Thames Water Authority area.

Sewage Sludge

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures his Department is taking to limit the disposal of sewage sludge at sea and to develop technologically and environmentally acceptable alternatives.

Mr. Moynihan: Control of the disposal of sewage sludge to sea is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. However, my Department is discussing urgently with the water authorities the steps to be taken to achieve significant reductions in the concentrations of "red list" substances in sludge. In addition, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has in preparation a manual of guidance to sludge disposers on how to assess the environmental and economic consequences of the various options available for sludge disposal so that the method having least overall environmental effect in each case can be properly selected.

Water Supply

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the bodies from whom water authorities accept requests for additional chemicals to be added to the public water supply.

Mr. Moynihan: Water undertakers consider requests for additional chemicals to be added to the public water supply from district health authorities under the terms of the Water (Fluoridation) Act 1985.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what respects the form of request and acceptance of liability from and by health authorities in respect of adding chemicals to the public water supply varies between water authorities and the statutory water companies.

Mr. Moynihan: When making such requests and accepting liability, health authorities make no distinction between water authorities and statutory water companies.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the statutory water companies which add chemicals to the public water supply at the request of health authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: The Newcastle and Gateshead Water Company, South Staffordshire Water Company, East Worcestershire Water Company and Colne Valley Water Company add either hexafluorosilicic acid or disodium hexafluorosilicate to the public water supply at the request of district health authorities.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a water authority can refuse a request from a health authority for additional chemicals to be added to the public water supply.

Mr. Moynihan: Yes.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has received regarding the addition of chemicals to the public water supply at the request of health authorities following privatisation of the water authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: The legal position concerning the addition of fluoride to water supplies is set out in the Water (Fluoridation) Act 1985 and will be unaffected by privatisation.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the range of additional chemicals added to the public water supply at the request of (a) health authorities and (b) other bodies not being water authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: Hexafluorsilicic acid and disodium hexafluorosilicate may be added to the public water supply but only at the request of district health authorities.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many water authorities have requested additional financial safeguards in order to cover all liabilities from the effects of chemicals added to the public water supply at the request of health authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: The Water Authorities Association has made a request to the Department of Health for additional financial safeguards on behalf of its members.

Toxic Waste Sites

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to obtain, maintain and publish up-to-date (a) lists and (b) maps, of toxic waste sites in England, Scotland and Wales.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We see no purpose in doing so as WDAs are required (Section 6(4) of COPA Control of Pollution Act 1974) to maintain a register of all disposal licences in force, which is open to inspection by the public.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Water Pollution

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions there are upon farmers adding to their land chemical or other additives that might pollute water supplies.

Mr. Ryder: Farmers are subject, as are all users of pesticide, to the general obligation imposed by condition 2 of the consent controlling the use of pesticides made under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 that they shall "take all reasonable precautions to protect the health of human beings, creatures and plants, to safeguard the environment, and in particular to avoid pollution of water".

Such reasonable precautions would include taking care to dispose of surplus spray and tank washings in a suitable way. Detailed statutory controls include using only pesticides which have been approved under the Regulations, and compliance with any conditions attached to use of the products, given on the product labels. The statutory conditions include maximum dose rates, the maximum number of treatments, and protection of the environment.

Animal Protein

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to prohibit the incorporation of animal residues in poultry feeding compounds.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no plans to do so.

The Protein Processing Order 1981 requires all animal protein including animal residues, for incorporation into poultry feedingstuffs to be manufactured free from salmonella contamination. My officials routinely inspect all plants producing such protein to ensure that this requirement is met. In addition discussions are underway on a code of practice aimed at reducing the risk of the contamination of final feedingstuffs by salmonella.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is his estimate of the increase in costs of producing a bacon pig if the use of animal protein in pig feed compounds were banned;

(2) what is his estimate of the increase in costs of producing one dozen eggs if the use of animal protein in poultry feed were banned in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: At present prices of animal and vegetable protein, it appears that the effect on production costs of substituting vegetable protein for the use of animal protein (other than fish meal) in feed would be small. However, the effect of a ban on the use of animal protein (other than fish meal) on the price of vegetable protein is difficult to determine and a firm estimate of increased costs both in feed and environmental terms and who would bear these costs cannot be estimated.

PCBs

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 20 December, what level of concentration of polychlorinated biphenyls in cod and whiting caught in Swansea bay is regarded as (a) low, (b) moderate and (c) high; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Guidelines for concentrations of polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) in fish and shellfish have been set for the joint monitoring programme of the Oslo and Paris commissions. Details of the "lower", "medium" and "upper" levels are given in my Department's aquatic environment monitoring report No. 16, page 38, available in the Library of the House.

The guidelines refer to the ranges of contaminant concentrations which would be expected to occur in European waters; they do not necessarily imply any risk to human health or to the environment.

The most recent tests for levels of PCBs in cod from Swansea bay were on cod liver, and give results, so far unpublished, of 1·9mg/kg wet weight. The guideline "lower" level for cod liver is up to 2·0mg/kg wet weight.

Butter

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much reduced-price European Economic Community butter has been sold to the following non-profit-making institutions under the provisions of European Community regulation 2191/81: (a) registered charities (excluding private educational establishments), (b) old people's homes, (c) state-maintained schools, (d) independent, non-maintained, private schools and (e) others.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In 1987, a total of 36,942 tonnes of reduced-price butter was sold to non-profit-making organisations in the European Community, of which 5,076 tonnes was sold in the United Kingdom. In 1988, a further 5,414 tonnes was sold to institutions in the United Kingdom. The additional information requested is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quantity of butter has been sold from European Economic Community private and public storage over the last 12 months for which figures are available; and what has been the reduction in stockpiles in private and public storage during this period.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the period 1 November 1987 to 31 October 1988, 887,105 tonnes of butter were sold from public intervention storage, and public stocks fell from 1,007,620 tonnes to 162,928 tonnes.

So far as private stocks are concerned, aid is paid for a maximum period of 180 days, and butter for which the aid is paid in any year must be brought back on to the market no later than 31 March the following year. There is therefore no long-term stockpile of butter in aided private storage. Figures are collected only for those butter stocks on which the Community pays private storage aid. During 1988, some 264,000 tonnes of butter received this aid, of which 211,994 tonnes remained in store at 31 October 1988.

Birds (Feeding Areas)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements are made by his Department to encourage farmers to set aside special feeding areas for geese and other birds.

Mr. Ryder: The set-aside scheme provides grants of up to £200 per hectare per year to farmers setting aside arable land and maintaining it in grass or another green cover crop. The Department's leaflet, "Set-Aside: A Practical Guide", which is sent to all participants, draws specific attention to the case for using set-aside land planted with grass as a feeding area for birds, such as brent geese.

Protein-Processing Plants

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what powers he has to order the destruction of bits and pieces of dead animals in protein-processing plants which are found by his officials to be contaminated by salmonella bacteria.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Protein Processing Order 1981 requires all animal protein to be manufactured free from salmonella. The correct application of heat and other treatment in the course of processing destroys all salmonella organisms.

In cases where routine sampling and testing indicated the presence of salmonella, further testing is carried out until a salmonella free product is produced.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy that no public funds by way of compensation for slaughtered laying hens will be given to any poultry business owning one of the protein-processing plants which his officials have found to be contaminated by salmonella bacteria within the last two years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many protein-processing plants use bits and pieces of dead animals for the purpose of ultimately feeding laying hens.

Mr. Donald Thompson: All protein processing plants producing animal protein use waste animal material in the manufacturing process. The animal protein is then used for incorporation into animal and poultry feedingstuffs including feed for laying hens.

Meat Inspection

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes he intends to make to meat inspection procedures after 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The arrangements for meat inspection after 1992 will depend upon decisions still to be taken by the Council of Ministers. These decisions will need to be based on proposals by the Commission which have not yet been received.

Salmonella

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any evidence of the occurrence of salmonella enteritides in wild animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no specific evidence of occurrence of salmonella enteritides in wild animals. Isolations from wild animals are not required under the Zoonoses Order 1975. It is recognised, however, that animals such as rats and mice and some birds are susceptible to salmonella enteritides.

Ms. Short: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest figures for the number of positive salmonella tests taken by officials of his Department from animal feed mills in the United Kingdom in 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My officials do not carry out sampling in animal feed mills. Protein processing plants, however, are subject to statutory controls including sampling of animal protein.

The latest figures show that of 135 inspections carried out during 1988 at protein processing plants, 17 cases of salmonella contamination were recorded. In each of these cases advice was given on overcoming the problems and when subsequently the plants were re-inspected they were found to be meeting the required bacteriological standards.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department is undertaking to establish the scale of infection of eggs by salmonella.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 21 December 1988]: In addition to detailed investigations of all reported outbreaks of food poisoning and of all isolations of salmonella in food animals, my Department is working closely with the Department of Health on a co-ordinated programme of research. While the Department of Health through the public health laboratory service is establishing the levels of infections in eggs, my Department is concentrating its efforts on improving the production and processing aspects of eggs.

Field trials are under way to develop a simple rapid test for the detection of salmonella enteritides in birds so that those birds transmitting the organism through their ovaries may be identified.

Amongst other research projects, work is being undertaken on the growth of salmonella in eggs under different storage conditions, and its survival under a range of different cooking regimes.

A working group of Government and industry experts has been established to act as a forum for the exchange of scientific information and to identify areas where further research might be required.

Meat Imports

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what powers he has to place a ban on the import of meat from European Economic Community countries which consistently supply meat with health certificates in cases where the meat is found to be defective; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Community rules require that only meat from export approved slaughterhouses and cutting plants which meet stringent structural, hygiene and inspection standards may be traded between member states. Complaints about consignments found to be defective are raised with the veterinary authorities of the exporting country who are required to take all necessary measures to correct the problem, including if necessary the withdrawal of export approval from the plant concerned. These arrangements work well. Directive 64/433/EEC on health problems affecting intra-Community trade in fresh meat sets out Community procedures for dealing with any problems which cannot be resolved between the competent authorities of the member states. Under these, member states may be authorised to prohibit the import of meat from the plant concerned if, upon examination, such action is found to be justified.

Pigmeat

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes have been made since 1 January 1988 in the system of enforcing hygiene standards on intra-Community trade in pigmeat; what further measures he proposes to take to prevent the importation of pigs or pigmeat suffering from Aujeszky's disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No changes have been made since 1 January 1988 to the system of enforcing hygiene standards on intra-Community trade in pigmeat.

As far as Aujeszky's disease is concerned, imports of pigmeat present no risk. Imports of live pigs present a potential risk unless adequate safeguards are provided. Member states which presently export to Great Britain have agreed to provide official health certification which gives us the protection we need. We are seeking harmonised Community rules which will give us the same degree of protection in relation to possible future imports of live pigs from other member states.

Egg Producers

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the number of egg producers in the United Kingdom; and what percentage of these producers have diversified into other forms of agricultural production in the last two years.

Mr. Ryder: Information about the number of egg producers who may have diversified into other forms of agricultural production in the last two years is not available. However, details of the number of holdings with laying fowls in the United Kingdom, taken from the United Kingdom annual agricultural census, in this period are given in the table.

Year	Number of holdings (thousands)
1986	44·6
1987	41·9
1988	41·3

Very small holdings which make only occasional returns are excluded from these figures.

EC Directives

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about current negotiations on proposed European Economic Community directives relevant to his Ministry.

Mr. Ryder: This Department is currently concerned with negotiations on a number of EC directives. In the food law harmonisation area, directives on food labelling, foods for particular nutritional uses, batch marking and official inspection of foodstuffs, on which common positions have been reached in the Council of Ministers, are currently before the European Parliament. Proposals for directives on nutrition labelling of food and food irradiation are before the Council.

NFU

Mr. Adley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers Union; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I meet the president of the National Farmers Union frequently to discuss agricultural matters.

Rating Reform

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the impact of the poll tax on farm workers whose rates are paid by their employers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: When the Government's proposals were first announced I received a number of representations about the impact of the introduction of the community charge on farm workers.

Food Grains

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost of support per ton of British food grains since 1980, both in constant and current prices, identifying separately the costs of set-aside schemes and identifying the proportion of that support met by public funds; and if he will estimate the proportion of that support directly translated into farm incomes.

Mr. Ryder: The table shows the total cost to the Exchequer of support for cereals in the United Kingdom and the level of cereals production in each year since 1980. It is not possible to distinguish between expenditure on cereals for animal feed, for human consumption or for industrial use. In the period in question there was no expenditure on set-aside.

The measures funded by these expenditures are intended to support the prices received by cereal producers; their effect on producers returns, and hence farm incomes, depends on a number of factors which vary from year to year.

Cattle

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost of support per

British cow and bull since 1980 both in constant and current prices, identifying the proportion of that support met by public funds; and if he will estimate the proportion of that support directly translated into farm incomes.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Direct support for beef breeding cows in the United Kingdom is provided under two schemes: the suckler cow premium scheme and, in the less favoured areas, the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme. Rates of payment are shown in table 1. These payments are made directly to producers and form part of farm income. There are no direct payments in relation to dairy cows.

Producers of cattle and milk also benefit directly or indirectly from a range of other measures, mainly in the form of market support for the products concerned. Total public expenditure on these measures, excluding those identified in table 1, is shown in table 2, together with the volumes of production. The purpose of most of the measures related to these expenditures is to support the returns received by producers: their effect on producer revenues, and hence farm income, depends on a number of factors which vary from year to year.

(1) The proportion of eligible expenditure financed directly by the United Kingdom exchequer is 75 per cent. for the hill livestock compensatory allowance but has varied between nil and around 55 per cent. over the period in the case of suckler cow premia. In both cases, the remainder is financed from the European Community funds to which the United Kingdom contributes.

Dumping at Sea

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what volume in cubic metres of British industrial waste, and of dredge spoils has been dumped in (a) the Irish sea, (b) the North sea and (c) other British coastal areas in each year from 1979 to 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information, which is recorded in tonnes, is as follows:

Information for 1988 is not yet available.

[1] Colliery waste, flyash etc.

[2] Information not broken down into sea areas until 1985.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what volume, in cubic metres, of British sewage sludge has been dumped into (a) the Irish sea, (b) the North sea and (c) other British coastal areas, in each year from 1979 to 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information, for which records are kept in tonnes, is as follows:

'000 tonnes

	Irish sea	North sea	Other British coastal areas
1979	1657·7	5793·1	1511·7

1987	1935·5	4734·3	2300·3

Information for 1988 is not yet available.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the mass in tonnes dumped into (a) the Irish sea and (b) other British coastal waters in each year from 1985 to 1988 inclusive of (i) arsenic, (ii) lead, (iii) nickel, (iv) chromium, (v) zinc, (vi) manganese, (vii) cadmium, (viii) copper, (ix) uranium, (x) fluoride, (xi) mercury, (xii) halogenated hydrocarbons, (xiii) polychlorinatedbiphenyls, (xiv) organochlorines, (xv) dioxins, and (xvi) organophosphates.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Records are available in respect of the following substances in material dumped under the provisions of the Dumping at Sea Act 1974 (1985) and part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 (1986 and 1987). Figures for 1988 are not yet available.

Cadmium	30	33	36
Copper	1,574	1,386	1,479
Mercury	16	11	12

Equivalent statistics are not available in respect of the remaining substances. They have been covered by exemptions from the international requirement to report quantities to the Oslo commission on de minimis grounds. It is estimated that any amounts in material dumped under the above Acts have been very small.

DEFENCE

Radar Systems (Procurement)

14. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of procurement of (a) Foxhunter and (b) the European fighter aircraft radar systems.

48. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of procurement of (a) Foxhunter and (b) the European fighter aircraft radar systems.

64. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of procurement of (a) Foxhunter and (b) the European fighter aircraft radar systems.

71. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of procurement of (a) Foxhunter and (b) the European fighter aircraft radar systems.

Mr. Sainsbury: Foxhunter radars are being delivered to the Royal Air Force in accordance with the terms and conditions of the firm price contract which was placed with Marconi Defence Systems last year. Bids for the European fighter aircraft nose radar competition have been received from two consortia, both of which include British companies. It is hoped that a decision on the winning consortium will be made early this year.

Defence Review

15. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends initiating a defence review.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As my right hon. Friend has made plain on a number of occasions, there are no plans for any review of our defence policies or commitments beyond the routine appraisal which is part of our annual planning cycle. We shall maintain our main defence roles.

Procurement (Excess Profits)

16. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to stop excess and undue profits in defence procurement.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to stop excess and undue profits in defence procurement.

75. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what initiatives have been taken by his Department to assist smaller firms to bid successfully in defence contracts.

79. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to stop excess and undue profits in defence procurement.

85. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to stop excess and undue profits in defence procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The most effective way of securing keen prices is through competition, and there has been a steady increase since 1979 in the proportion, by value, of contracts placed in a competitive environment. During the same period there has been a significant decrease in the proportion, by value, of contracts priced on the basis of cost plus a percentage fee for profit. Where contracts have to be placed non-competitively we continue to seek all information relevant to pricing, and to use post costing on a selective basis.

Conventional Stability Talks

17. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the Government's policy for the conventional stability talks.

80. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the Government's policy for the conventional stability talks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The British Government and their NATO allies are firmly committed to the new negotiations on conventional forces in Europe which should begin in the near future in Vienna. The Alliance will seek the elimination of capabilities for surprise attack and large-scale offensive action through measures such as the establishment of equal limits on the number of key equipments, like tanks, artillery and other armoured vehicles, held by the countries of NATO and the Warsaw pact. NATO has already suggested that the number of tanks in Europe held in total by the 23 nations of NATO and the Warsaw pact should be limited to about 40,000. Even allowing for the very welcome reductions recently announced by President Gorbachev, this would require large asymmetrical cuts by the Warsaw pact on account of its remaining substantial numerical superiority.

28. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet the secretary-general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation to discuss the Vienna talks on conventional stability.

72. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet the secretary-general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation to discuss the Vienna talks on conventional stability.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will next meet Dr. Woerner early this year. They are likely to discuss a wide range of defence and security matters of mutual interest, including arms control. In the meantime, officials are participating at all levels within the Alliance on preparations for the forthcoming negotiations.

Soviet Union (Armed Forces)

18. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to whether the Soviet Union is halting the modernisation of its armed forces.

61. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence he has as to whether the Soviet Union is halting the modernisation of its armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no evidence to suggest the Soviet Union is halting the modernisation of its armed forces.

Trident

19. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the production, leasing and servicing arrangements for Trident.

54. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the production, leasing and servicing arrangements for Trident.

59. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the production, leasing and servicing arrangements for Trident.

84. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the production, leasing and servicing arrangements for Trident.

Mr. Sainsbury: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence told the House on 29 November last year at column 224, a statement on the progress of the Trident programme will take place shortly.

UK Mobile Force

20. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the future role of the United Kingdom mobile force.

Mr. Neubert: Following a NATO review of reinforcements for the northern region, the United Kingdom mobile force will on current plans continue to be committed to the defence of the Baltic approaches.

USSR (Military Reductions)

24. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's short-range modernisation programme of President Gorbachev's proposals for military reductions.

52. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's short-range modernisation programme of President Gorbachev's proposals for military reductions.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) and for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short).

22. Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for United Kingdom defence policy of President Gorbachev's proposed military reductions.

49. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's defence strategy of President Gorbachev's proposed reductions in Soviet forces stationed in Hungary, Czechoslovakia and East Germany.

51. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for defence policy of President Gorbachev's proposal to reduce the numbers of tanks, combat aircraft and artillery systems.

58. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the United Kingdom's defence policy of President Gorbachev's proposals to reduce the numbers of tanks, combat aircraft and artillery systems.

62. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's defence strategy of President Gorbachev's proposed reductions in Soviet forces stationed in Hungary, Czechoslovakia and East Germany.

70. Mrs. Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the force reductions announced by Mr. Gorbachev.

77. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's defence strategy of President Gorbachev's proposed reductions in Soviet forces stationed in Hungary, Czechoslovakia and East Germany.

88. Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for United Kingdom defence policy of President Gorbachev's proposed military reduction.

89. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for United Kingdom defence policy of President Gorbachev's proposals to reduce the numbers of tanks, combat aircraft and artillary systems.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members and my hon. Friend to the answer I gave today to the hon. Members for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan), for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) and for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett).

Free-fall Bombs

69. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his latest plans for a nuclear replacement for the Royal Air Force's free-fall bombs.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 22 December to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) at column 364.

NATO Eurogroup

76. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when last he attended a meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Eurogroup.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence attended a meeting of the Eurogroup in Brussels on 30 November 1988.

Defence Producers

25. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for defence procurement of the trend towards trans-national co-operation and merger among major defence producers.

55. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for defence procurement of the trend towards trans-national co-operation and merger among major defence producers.

57. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for defence procurement of the trend towards trans-national co-operation and merger among major defence producers.

63. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for defence procurement of the trend towards trans-national co-operation and merger among major defence producers.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry monitors trans-national co-operative arrangements and mergers among major defence producers and assesses them on a case-by-case basis.

Air Cadets (Venture Fleet Replacement)

26. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which motor glider type has been selected to replace the Venture fleet of the Air Cadets.

Mr. Sainsbury: Invitations to tender for the supply of 53 modern GRP motor gliders are to be issued later this month. A decision on the choice of glider is not expected until July 1989, after evaluation of the tenders and flight and engineering systems checks.

Armed Forces (Civilian Manpower)

27. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilians are currently employed by the combined armed forces.

Mr. Sainsbury: Details of MOD service and civilian manpower are provided in section 4 of volume 2 of the annually produced "Statement on the Defence Estimates" (Cmd. 344-II). The latest available figures (at 1 November 1988) are 142,237 United Kingdom-based civilians and 31,534 locally engaged civilians overseas.

Tucano Aircraft

29. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects all Tucano aircraft to be in service with the Royal Air Force.

74. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects all Tucano aircraft to be in service with the Royal Air Force.

83. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects all Tucano aircraft to be in service with the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) on 21 December 1988.

Chemical Weapons

30. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last had consultations with his United States counterpart on the deployment of chemical weapons.

40. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last had consultations with his United States counterpart on the deployment of chemical weapons.

86. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last had consultations with his United States counterpart on the deployment of chemical weapons.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Gateshead (Ms. Quin).

Army Air Corps

31. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the future role of the Army Air Corps.

Mr. Neubert: The principal role of the Army Air Corps (AAC) will remain the direct support of the ground battle by the provision of armed (principally anti-armour) action, reconnaissance, direction of fire, and command and control. For this purpose the AAC is equipped with a range of rotary and fixed wing aircraft. The corps will also support 24 Brigade in its new airmobile role operating both anti-tank and utility Lynx helicopters. Further support to 24 Brigade will be provided by the RAF's larger troop-carrying and logistic helicopters.

Royal Ordnance plc

32. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why no specific valuation was placed on Royal Ordnance plc intellectual property rights at the time of their sale.

45. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why no specific valuation was placed on Royal Ordnance plc intellectual property rights at the time of their sale.

Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why no specific valuation was placed on Royal Ordnance plc intellectual property rights at the time of their sale.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why no specific valuation was placed on Royal Ordnance plc intellectual property rights at the time of their sale.

Mr. Sainsbury: When the shares in Royal Ordnance plc were sold to British Aerospace plc the sale was made on the basis of the price offered by the highest bidder for the whole enterprise, including the intellectual property rights. No specific valuation was necessary as the ultimate return to public funds was determined by the open market's assessment of the value of the whole business, including all of its assets and liabilities.

RAF Flight Training (Germany)

33. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions have been placed on the Royal Air Force's flight training in West Germany.

Mr. Neubert: The Royal Air Force, together with the air forces of our allies, as an exceptional measure suspended temporarily flying training in the Federal Republic of Germany on 9 December 1988 as a mark of respect for the victims of the tragic accident at Remscheid the previous day. The Royal Air Force resumed normal training in the FRG on 3 January 1989.

Strategic Defence Initiative

34. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the United States Secretary of Defence on the future development of the strategic defence initiative.

65. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the United States Secretary of Defence on the future development of the stategic defence initiative.

82. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the United States Secretary of State for Defence on the future development of the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave on 20 December 1988 to the hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley) at column 253.

NATO (Military Strategy)

35. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with Mr. Manfred Wörner, secretary-general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, on military strategy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 22 December to the hon. Members for Pontefract and Castleford (Mr. Lofthouse) and for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) at column 364.

Armilla Patrol

36. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what lessons have been learned following the deployment of the Armilla patrol.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The success of the Armilla patrol has reinforced many lessons from the past. These include the importance of setting precise and realistic operational objectives, pursued in accordance with international law and as part of a firm foreign policy. In addition, Armilla has demonstrated the value of close co-operation and concentration of effort with our European and NATO allies in out-of-area operations. Above all, the professionalism of the Royal Navy, the high quality of its equipment, and the quietly effective way it has gone about its task have been shown to be vital to the successful achievement of Armilla's objective of protecting British shipping and contributing to the maintenance of freedom of navigation in the international waters in the Gulf. The Armilla patrol with its afloat support will accordingly remain in the Gulf without change to its mission as long as there is a job for it to do.

However, in the light of the continuing ceasefire between Iran and Iraq, the absence of any recent mining, the achievements of European and American minesweepers in removing mines from international waters, and the successful completion of the 300 mile route check by WEU navies known as Operation Cleansweep, we have decided that there is at present no suitable task for the Calendar MCM group of three Royal Navy mine countermeasures vessels which would justify replacing the present group when it sails home in early March. These vessels will therefore return to high priority tasks in home waters. We shall however keep three MCMVs earmarked for rapid return to the Gulf should circumstances warrant it.

United States Secretary of State for Defence

37. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet the United States Secretary of State for Defence; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) on 22 December at column 364.

Frigates

38. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to place the next order for the type 23 frigate.

73. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to place the next order for a type 23 frigate.

78. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to place the next order for a type 23 frigate.

81. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends ordering further frigates for the Royal Navy.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Members for Newcastle-upon-Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) and for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett) on 29 November 1988 at column 217.

SSN and SSBN (Decommissioning)

39. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement of the progress he has made in relation to decommissioning the SSNs and SSBNs between 1988 and 2000.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the reply which I gave the hon. Member on 24 May 1988 at column 160.

Tactical Air-to-Surface Missiles

41. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the United States Secretary of Defence on the development and deployment of the tactical air-to-surface missile.

68. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the United States Secretary of Defence on the development and deployment of the tactical air-to-surface missile.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Doran).

Anglo-French Reciprocal Purchasing

42. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in Anglo-French reciprocal purchasing of defence equipment.

Mr. Sainsbury: Progress on this initiative, aimed at increasing co-operation to avoid the costly and wasteful duplication of development effort in conventional defence equipment, has been good. A framework of practical measures, including the publication of contracts bulletins in both countries, has now been established. In addition, there have been three equipment conferences, on land, sea and air systems to discuss possible areas of co-operation. These were well attended by industry and Government from both countries. Some contracts have already been signed and more tenders are under consideration on both sides of the Channel.

Defence Export Services Organisation

43. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role the Defence Export Services Organisation plays in defence exports.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Defence Export Services Organisation provides invaluable assistance to British firms in helping them market and sell their defence products and services overseas.

Chieftain Tank Replacement

44. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the Chieftain tank replacement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 20 December 1988. There have been numerous representations from hon. Members, from industry and from members of the public about the choice of a Chieftain tank replacement.

Reservists

46. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role reservists have in the defence of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neubert: In addition to forming a major element of the reinforcement of NATO, reservists, both volunteer and regular, have a key part to play in the defence of the United Kingdom. The Royal Naval Reserve provides a minesweeping capability in home waters and provide personnel to organise and control merchant shipping worldwide, along with undertaking other tasks in support of the Royal Navy. The Territorial Army and home service force would play a major part in securing our home base, including the guarding of key points and the provision of reconnaissance and signal facilities. The Royal Auxiliary Air Force and the Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve, in addition to undertaking ground defence of airfields, would provide personnel to augment existing capabilities in a wide variety of roles, ranging from maritime communications to photographic interpretation. Where necessary, former Regular Service personnel with a liability to serve after their regular engagement may be called up, principally to reinforce formed units individually.

French Defence Minister

47. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends meeting the French Defence Minister; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence hopes to meet M. Chevenement early this year and, as usual, would expect to discuss a wide range of subjects of mutual interest.

NATO (40th Anniversary)

50. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has for celebrating the 40th anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 22 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) at columns 377-78.

WEU Defence Ministers

53. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends meeting the Western European Union Defence Ministers; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence expects to meet Western European Union Defence Ministers again in the spring for discussions on a wide range of defence issues.

NATO-Warsaw Pact (Nuclear Forces)

56. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the current balance in short-range nuclear forces between the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current balance in short-range nuclear forces between NATO and the Warsaw pact is illustrated in figure 19 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988", Cm 344-I.

Frigates

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for the efficiency of type-23 frigates of the delay in provision of command automated control systems.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for the efficiency of type-23 frigates of the delay in provision of command automated control systems.

60. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for the efficiency of type-23 frigates of the delay in provision of command automated control systems.

87. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for the efficiency of type-23 frigates of the delay in provision of command automated control systems.

Mr. Sainsbury: Following the cancellation of the CACS4 programme, two consortia were invited to conduct project definition studies in parallel for a new command system. The results of the competitive PD studies have been received and are currently being evaluated to decide which of the two consortia will continue alone into the development and initial production phase of the project. This will mean that some early type-23 frigates will enter service without a command system.

The lack of a command system will restrict the co-ordination of the weapons and sensors although each weapon and sensor will be capable of independent action. Without the full integration of the weapons and sensors the overall effectiveness of the ship will be reduced, particularly in a demanding multiple threat situation. Despite this, however, the type-23 will provide a very much more effective contribution to our maritime forces than the Leander class frigates that it will replace.

NATO (Military Strategy)

66. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had on military strategy with Mr. Manfred Woerner, secretary-general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence last met Dr. Woerner at the meetings of the Eurogroup and defence planning committee in Brussels from 30 November to 2 December. They discussed a wide range of subjects of mutual interest.

NATO Secretary-General

67. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends meeting the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's secretary-general; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will next meet Dr. Woerner early this year. They are likely to discuss a wide range of defence and security matters of mutual interest.

Support Services

90. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what competition takes place in defence support services.

Mr. Sainsbury: In order to obtain the best value for money it is our policy to extend competition in defence support services to the maximum extent possible, consistent with operational requirements. The largest single example is the transfer of the royal dockyards to commercial management, but, in addition, over 120 separate functions and activities have been contracted out in various parts of the Ministry of Defence. Since 1979 and up to March 1988 contracting out of services, excluding the dockyards, has resulted in savings of over 13,000 mainly civilian public sector posts and net annual financial savings of some £50 million. Looking to the future, we have in train a rolling programme of market testing which will extend progressively to all parts of the support area.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Burghfield

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make it his policy to publish the results of any investigation into the causes of the explosion at the atomic weapons establishment at Burghfield on 2 December; whether any work was carried out to improve the safety of the area in which the explosion occurred as a result of the report by Sir Edward Pochin in 1978; and when was the last time that the area in which the explosion occurred was tested for its safety of operation;

(2) whether the incineration of conventional explosives at the atomic weapons establishment at Burghfield has now been suspended.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 8 December for details of the explosion at AWE Burghfield. The Pochin inquiry of 1978 was concerned solely with the separate issue of the radiological safety of certain buildings at the Aldermaston site.

Arms Race (Symposium)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any Ministers or civil servants from his Department were invited (a) to give papers or (b) to be in attendance as observers at the international scientists symposium, "Ways out of the Arms Race", at the Imperial College of Science and Technology, in London from 2 to 4 December.

Mr. Sainsbury: No Ministers were invited. No MOD civil servants attended. Imperial college did issue over 100 invitations to MOD employees.

Royal Ordnance

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has had any discussions with Royal Ordnance about the production of explosives, propellants and ammunition in the event of war.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MOD's procurement strategy for explosives, propellants and ammunition to meet both peace time and war time needs takes into account industrial considerations and, where appropriate, discussions with our suppliers, including Royal Ordnance.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why he is waiting for the outcome of the Royal Ordnance rationalisation plans before he discusses the retention of specific manufacturing capabilities with the management of Royal Ordnance.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Renfrew, West and Inverclyde (Mr. Graham) by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 29 November at column 565 and the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Eccles (Miss Lestor) on 29 November at column 567.

Nitroglycerine

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what priority he accords within the requirements of the defence industrial base for ammunition to the retention of a United Kingdom-based capability to manufacture nitroglycerine.

Mr. Sainsbury: Nitroglycerine is an essential component of many types of ammunition. It is available from a number of United Kingdom and NATO sources. We monitor these sources on a continuing basis to ensure that our requirements will be met.

Procurement Contracts

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total amount of cost overruns against original estimates on current procurement contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: Original estimates are, by their very nature, provisional calculations. They will not relate precisely to the scope of work which is contracted for after detailed specifications are agreed. They are not, therefore, susceptible to direct comparison. The majority of defence contracts are now placed at firm, non-variable prices or, otherwise, with provisions to limit the Ministry's liability, or in the case of cost-plus percentage fee arrangements, with a maximum price. Once prices are agreed and contracted for, the liability for cost overruns would rest with the contractor.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if body scans will be made available to British nuclear test veterans, who are concerned about the prospects of their being contaminated by nuclear fall out during British nuclear tests in the 1950s in the Pacific; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have no plans to offer scans in a whole body monitor. Participants who are concerned about their health are advised to consult their GP.

"Death on the Rock"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter from the Second Permanent Under-Secretary of State, K. C. MacDonald to Lord Windelsham and Richard Rampton QC, regarding the programme "Death on the Rock" produced by Thames Television.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I shall consider doing so when Lord Windlesham's report is published.

Service Men (Re-enlistment)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any ex-service men who have been sentenced to a term of imprisonment have been re-enlisted; and what is his policy on such appointments.

Mr. Neubert: Records are not kept in a way which would allow us readily to identify whether any ex-service men with a prison record have been re-enlisted. Applications for re-enlistment are considered against the same criteria as are those applying to join for the first time. Any individual applying to join the armed services is obliged to declare any previous unspent convictions. While the general policy is not to accept for service those who have an unspent conviction involving a term of imprisonment, each case is considered on its own merits and there is provision for exceptions to be made.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is policy with regard to members of the armed forces not on duty crossing into the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Only the following categories of Regular service personnel are permitted to take leave of absence in the Republic of Ireland: those domiciled in the Republic up to the time of their enlistment; those who have a spouse or parents, or in the absence of the latter, a brother, sister or child domiciled in the Republic; and those who have urgent private affairs to settle in the Republic, which cannot be dealt with other than by a personal visit.

Permission to visit the Republic can be given only by the commanding officer of the service man concerned. Service men who breach these regulations are dealt with by the service authorities.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis the Irish Government agree to the armed forces crossing into the Republic of Ireland, as referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East of 6 May, Official Report, columns 619-20.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The details of arrangements between the two Governments concerned regarding cross-border security co-operation are confidential.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions, in each year from 1982 to the current date, members of the armed forces on duty have crossed into the Republic of Ireland, distinguishing between land and air crossings.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers of occasions when members of Her Majesty's forces on duty have crossed into the Republic of Ireland since 1982 is as follows:

	Ground	Air	Total
1982	17	28	45
1983	13	18	31
1984	16	15	31
1985	14	13	27
1986	31	19	50
1987	34	21	55
1988	15	35	50
TOTAL	140	149	289

On the vast majority of occasions the border was crossed as a result of navigational error; these incidents were notified to the Irish Government. On the remaining occasions, the border was crossed with the agreement of the Irish Government.

Printed Material

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of all printed material designed and printed at Army headquarters Northern Ireland and disseminated to the public from 1979 to the current date.

Mr. Neubert: I am aware of only one such document, entitled "Complaints against Members of HM Forces", which is available to the public at Army and Royal Ulster Constabulary locations. I will place a copy in the Library.

Army Information Services

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table showing the annual expenditure by his Department on the Army information services from 1972 to the current date.

Mr. Neubert: The Army information services is the name by which the public relations unit in Northern Ireland is known. The major expenditure is that of salaries and associated costs. Approximate figures for the years 1983 to 1988 are as follows:

Year	£
1983-84	216,000
1984-85	230,000
1985-86	240,000
1986-87	122,000
1987-88	130,000
1988-89	140,000

The reduction in costs in 1986 onwards is as a result of a cut in staff numbers following a review of public relations numbers. Details for earlier years or more detailed costings cannot be provided without disproportionate cost.

Overseas Educational Institutions

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of the funding of educational institutions overseas in support of the defence programme, referred to in his answer of 23 May to the hon. Member for Brent, East, Official Report, column 40.

Mr. Sainsbury: The defence research programme sponsors two contracts with educational institutions overseas at a total annual value of £70,000.

Project Clockwork Orange

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the project known as Clockwork Orange.

Mr. Neubert: The hon. Member has made various representations. As the hon. Member was advised in a letter dated 15 August 1988 from the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, we are aware of no evidence that a plan by this name ever existed.

Captain Fred Holroyd

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when was the special confidential report relating to Captain Fred Holroyd (retired) written in June 1975, subsequently amended, as referred to in his written answer of 28 March to the hon. Member for Brent, East, Official Report, column 363; on whose authority this was done; and when Captain Holroyd was informed of this amendment.

Mr. Neubert: As the reply given on 20 July 1988 at columns 709-10 to my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces makes clear, following Captain Holroyd's appeal to the Army board of the Defence Council, the Army board directed that all references to a mental problem be removed from his confidential report. Captain Holroyd was informed of this direction in March 1976.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date Captain Fred Holroyd (retired) was informed of the findings of the full medical board which sat on 1 July 1975, as referred to in his written answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East, of 28 March, Official Report, column 362.

Mr. Neubert: Our records show that Captain Holroyd was aware of the findings of the medical board during an interview with the assistant adjutant general on 12 August 1975. We believe that he was informed orally immediately after the Board on 1 July, since this is normal practice.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date Captain Fred Holroyd (retired) was informed of the findings of the special confidential report initiated on 5 June 1975, as referred to in his written answer of 28 March, to the hon. Member for Brent, East Official Report, column 362.

Mr. Neubert: In July 1975.

Computer Hacking

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer of 13 December 1988, there have been any attempts to interfere with unclassified systems by any computer hacker.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Two such attempts have been detected. Both were defeated by security precautions.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether the grant facilities outlined in European Community Document 8794/88 (Proposal for Action Programme of European Tourism Year 1990) will (a) become available before 1990 and (b) be available for holiday cottage development;

(2) when the European Economic Community tourist grant will be made available for the first time in the United Kingdom;

(3) when the European Economic Community tourist grant will be available to the owners of holiday accommodation; and when the final financial details of the scheme will be known.

Mr. Lee: The funds available under the action programme for European Tourism Year are available for assisting approaches to the promotion of off-season, cultural, rural and social and other forms of tourism and tourism by young people. The Commission will have 2·5 million ecu (about £1·6 million) available in 1990 to contribute up to 40 per cent. of the cost of projects, from anywhere in the Community, which it selects for assistance. All the methods for applying for financial assistance have yet to be finally decided. The Commission intends to start considering applications in 1989.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will enable the English Tourist Board to be a party to the tourist policy review.

Mr. Lee: The English Tourist Board and the British Tourist Authority have been involved fully with the review which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on July 18. The boards' chairmen, each individual member of the boards, and board officials have been seen by the review team. The review team have also received written submissions from the boards.

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Government have any plans to reduce or eliminate tax liability for company employees who use the workplace nurseries.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.
No.

Vacancies (Coventry)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish an analysis of known job vacancies at (a) the jobcentre and (b) the careers office, for 16 to 18-year-olds for the Coventry area.

Mr. Cope: Information on job vacancies is not specifically kept for 16 to 18-year-olds.

On 4 November 1988 there were 100 unfilled job vacancies at the Coventry careers office and 479 unfilled job vacancies at the jobcentre. As some employers use both services there could be some duplication in those figures.

Cuprinol Ltd.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Health and Safety Executive study into pentachlorophenol, lindane and TBTO at Cuprinol Ltd. in Frome, Somerset, will be completed; and whether a copy of the findings will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) is not carrying out a study into pentachlorophenol, lindane and TBTO at Cuprinol Ltd. Frome. However, an independent committee of inquiry has been set up by Cuprinol Ltd. and HSE is awaiting the report of that committee before considering what further action, if any, is required.

A review of lindane is to be carried out by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides (ACP). This was agreed in November 1988, evidence is to be forwarded in the first instance to HSE by March 1989, and the review is expected to take one or two years. The ACP is also currently carrying out a review of TBTO, which is due to be completed this year.

Pentachlorophenol

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will place in the Library copies of the evidence relating to the carcinogenic effects of pentachlorophenol on humans.

Mr. Nicholls: There are likely to be several hundred articles on the toxicity of pentachlorophenol, which could be relevant to an assessment of its possible carcinogenic effects, published in various scientific journals from different countries. I regret that all this material could be identified and obtained only at disproportionate cost but if the hon. Member has any particular items in mind I should be glad to arrange for the relevant articles to be obtained.

Compulsory Training

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set up an inquiry into the possibility of establishing a compulsory residential training scheme for minors of no fixed abode operated in co-operation with personnel seconded from the armed services.

Mr. Cope: We have no plans to do so.

Job Clubs

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make available the results of the spring 1988 postal survey of ex-job club members; if he will indicate how many of those surveyed were (a) in permanent, full-time jobs, (b) unemployed and (c) in jobs paying more than £120 per week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Copies of the report "Job Clubs—Report on the Postal Survey of Individuals who joined Job Clubs in Autumn 1987" have been lodged in the House of Commons Library.

The survey was a follow-up of a sample of people who joined job clubs between 14 September and 23 October 1987. At the time of the survey, 11 per cent. were still in job clubs, 87 per cent. had left and the destination of the remaining 2 per cent. was unclear.

Of those who had definitely left job clubs, 57 per cent. had left to go into a job or self-employment and a further 14 per cent. had gone into community programme, full-time education or training. Of those who left for a job or self-employment, 58 per cent. described themselves as in permanent, full-time jobs.

At the time of the survey (some six months after joining job clubs) 43 per cent. of all leavers were still in jobs and 40 per cent. described themselves as unemployed.

Thirty one per cent. of those entering permanent, full-time jobs were earning over £120 a week.

The survey showed that the majority of those who leave without a job do so very early on and that after one week the proportion of people leaving for jobs increases up to three weeks' stay (69 per cent.) and then declines gradually up to nine to 13 weeks' stay (60 per cent.). These results demonstrate that it is worth giving job clubs a chance and that persistence pays off.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job clubs have been (a) established, and (b) closed or withdrawn since the start of the programme, giving the information separately for those run by (i) the employment service and (ii) external agencies; how many job club members have found jobs or other positive outcomes and how many members have now been attending their job club for over six months.

Mr. Lee: Information on the numbers of job clubs established and closed or withdrawn since the start of the programme is only available at disproportionate cost.

At 25 November 1988 1,220 job clubs were open. Of these 536 were run by employment service staff, mainly based in jobcentres, with 684 run by other organisations working to an annual contract. Since April 1986, when central records began, 121,494 job club members have found jobs and a further 31,268 have gone into other positive outcomes such as employment training, a place on community programme, or the enterprise allowance scheme. Records are not kept of the number of members who have been attending job clubs for over six months. However, the job club postal survey which was carried out in March 1988 found that around six months after joining 11 per cent. of respondents were still in job clubs.

London Labour Market Surveys

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what independent technical and academic advice his Department received before commissioning, and as part of the London labour market surveys referred to in the recent White Paper "Employment for the 1990s".

Mr. Cope: My Department's professional staff are trained and experienced in survey design. They are in regular contact with professional colleagues in the academic world and in independent research and survey organisations. The two London labour market surveys referred to in the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" (Cm 540) were designed and undertaken by reputable professional survey companies, IFF Research Ltd. and the Harris Research Centre Ltd. Full details of the results and the methods used were published by HMSO in the report entitled "The London Labour Market", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what independent assessment was made of the final report of the London labour market surveys.

Mr. Cope: In publishing the final report of the two London labour market surveys last November under the title "The London Labour Market", and by including in the report full tabulations of the survey results and details of the methodology used, my Department has made the report available for independent assessment by anyone who wishes to read it.

Community Projects

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many projects for disabled people, children, elderly people and the environment face closure as a result of the switch to employment training and his proposals to establish training and enterprise councils; how many community programme jobs will disappear; and what level of funding to local community projects will be lost.

Mr. Nicholls: Detailed information on individual projects is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, every effort has been made to ensure that suitable community programme projects have been able to continue under employment training.

The establishment of training and enterprise councils will improve the quality and suitability of training opportunities for employment training clients, equipping them with the skills necessary to meet the demands of the local labour markets. As at present, the training course includes training on projects which meet the needs of disabled people, children, the elderly, and the environment.

Training Programmes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the quantifiable performance indicators he refers to in paragraph 5.21 of the "Training for Employment" White Paper.

Mr. Nicholls: A range of quantifiable and meaningful performance indicators for employment training is being developed by the training agency along the lines outlined in the White Paper. These will be published in due course.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a local breakdown of (a) unfilled vacancies on the YTS and (b) those young people disqualified from benefit after termination of their bridging allowance.

Mr. Cope: The number of unfilled YTS places on 30 November 1988, the latest available date, for each of the Training Agency regions is given in the table.

Since 16 and 17-year-olds on bridging allowance while waiting to take up a YTS place have no entitlement to income support, the question of disqualification following the termination of that allowance does not arise.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training scheme places have been filled in each month since the scheme's inception in each area for which employment statistics are collated; and what is the national total.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is provided in the following tables.

Income Support

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds, by region, had made applications for income support on the ground of extreme hardship and how many had been granted it at the following dates: 23 and 30 September, 7, 14, 21 and 28 October and 4, 11, 18 and 25 November; and how many at the same dates had been granted income support on the ground of being within exempted categories, shown by category.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply. The number of applications from 16 and 17-year-olds for income support on grounds of severe hardship and the number of directions to enable benefit to be paid at each of the dates specified are in the following table:

(1) Based on 100 per cent. count of applications received.

(2) Information relates to the number of applications rather than to the number of individual young people involved. Some individuals have made more than one application.

The number of awards of Income Support made to 16 and 17 year olds during September and October 1988 is given in the following table:

DSS Administrative Region	Number of awards
	For a limited period[1]	For an unlimited period[2]	Total

[1] "Limited period" awards are those made under Schedule 1A to the Income Support (General Regulations)—limited to the same period as the Child Benefit extension period.

[2] "Unlimited period" awards are those made under Schedule 1 to the Income Support (General Regulations)—no time limit.

Notes:

1. Information based on 100 per cent. count of awards made up to 31 October 1988 and represents the only information readily available; weekly information and finer breakdown of categories could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

2. Information relates to the number of awards rather than to the number of individuals involved. Some individuals may have had more than one award.

SCOTLAND

Sheriff Courts (Small Claims Procedure)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sheriff courts in Scotland had forms available for issue to the public and practitioners explaining the small claims procedures on 30 November 1988 and which courts did not; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: By 30 November all sheriff courts had had initial deliveries of small claims payment summonses. Small claims summonses for use in the less frequently raised actions of delivery and implement, and general explanatory material about the small claims procedure, were delivered to the courts by early December. Arrangements were also made for supplies of these forms to be issued by the Scottish Courts Administration direct to practitioners and others on request.

Chicken Feed

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many plants producing feeding stuffs for chickens are in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are 23 protein processing plants in Scotland, the products of which may be incorporated into a variety of livestock and poultry feeding stuffs.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will make available the regularity framework under which the electricity supply industry in Scotland will operate after privatisation.

Mr. Lang: I have today made copies of the draft model licence for the successor companies to the South of Scotland Electricity Board and the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board available to Members of the Standing Committee considering the Electricity Bill, and placed copies in the Library of both Houses accompanied by explanatory notes.

As vertically integrated utilities the Scottish companies will be licensed to generate, transmit and supply electricity. The licence for each company will be granted as a composite document containing the licences for each of these activities.

The licence contains conditions restricting the level of charges and providing for third parties to have access to the transmission and distribution systems of the licensee, conditions relating to technical and operating standards, arrangements for ensuring security of fuel supply, and consultation on employees' health and safety. It also contains conditions prohibiting cross-subsidy or discrimination and makes important provision for aspects of consumer relations and standards of service.

The licence as it will apply to the successor company to the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board contains a condition requiring the licensee to maintain common tariffs in his authorised supply area, pursuant to clause 3(2) of the Electricity Bill. The licensees will be required to provide information to the Director General of Electricity Supply and to pay fees to cover regulatory costs.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will introduce regulations which require that community charge payers should be informed that the community charge register containing their names and addresses can be inspected and copied by third parties.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 December 1988]: It is made clear in the notice which is sent to registered persons informing them of their entry in the community charges register, prescribed in schedule 2 to the Community Charges (Registration) (Scotland) (No. 2) Regulations 1988, that the parts of the register showing names, addresses and collective community charge multipliers applying to certain premises will be made available for public inspection.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report, a list of all those categories of people who will (a) be excluded from liability to pay the community charge and (b) be entitled to a rebate on community charge payments; and what the scale of such rebates will be.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Those persons who will be exempt from liability to pay the personal community charge are listed in schedule 1A to the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, as amended by the Local Government Finance Act 1988. In addition, people undertaking a full-time course of education who fall within the definitions contained in the Personal Community Charge (Students) (Scotland) Regulations 1988 will be liable for only 20 per cent. of the personal community charge. People on a low income who qualify under the provisions of the Housing Benefit (Community Charge Rebates) (Scotland) Regulations 1988 will be entitled to a rebate of their personal community charge or their collective community charge contribution as appropriate. Depending on their personal circumstances, including income, they will be entitled to a rebate of up to 80 per cent. of their liability.

Fish Farms (Pollution)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to amend the Control of Pollution Act 1974 to enhance the powers of the river purification boards to control pollution from cage fish farms.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Discharges from fish farms are regarded as trade effluents and are subject to control by the river purification authorities under the consent provisions of section 34 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. We propose to clarify the application of these provisions to fish farms in forthcoming legislation.

A74

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are for improved road connections between Edinburgh and the A74.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: None are presently planned, as the routes to the south of Edinburgh are being studied by consulting engineers commissioned by the Scottish Development Department to consider the effectiveness of the existing trunk road network in meeting current and future demands between Edinburgh and the south including, in particular, the motorway and trunk road network in England. I expect to receive the technical report, which will recommend a future route strategy, in January and thereafter I intend to make a statement on its findings and the proposed way ahead. This is likely to be in the spring and there will be a period for comment before we reach final decisions.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether expenditure on upgrading the A74 will lead to any delays in other road projects in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Provision for the roads programme has been increased substantially in 1990-91 and later years when construction of the M74 will be under way. Road schemes generally are becoming more expensive as standards rise. Therefore, the benefits accruing from each potential scheme will have to be carefully assessed in the light of the resources available as decided in future reviews of expenditure plans.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the upgraded A74 will be a three-lane or two-lane road.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Feasibility studies are under way to assess the best means of implementing the Government's decision to upgrade the A74 to motorway status. Only after these studies have been completed and all the options examined in depth will a decision be taken about whether the M74 will be a dual two-lane or three-lane motorway.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the upgraded A74 will be a motorway or a road built to motorway standards.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The Government are committed to upgrading the A74 to motorway status.

Sewage

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sewage pumping stations in (a) Strathclyde regional council area, excluding Glasgow district, and (b) Glasgow district council area, have consent for the emergency discharge of screened sewage effluent into local ditches, burns, streams and rivers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: This information is not held centrally. Information regarding sewage pumping stations is held by Strathclyde regional council as sewerage authority. Details of consents for emergency discharges of screened sewage are available from the Clyde river purification board.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what monitoring takes place of discharges of screened sewage effluent into watercourses in Scotland; how many such discharges are known to have occurred in each of the last three years; and how many cases of pollution have occurred as a result.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: This information is not held centrally. These discharges are subject to control by the river purification authorities. Information about consented discharges is held on statutory registers which may be inspected at the offices of the river purification authority concerned. Details of routine monitoring of such discharges and of pollution incidents are also held by river purification authorities.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek to make it compulsory for all new residential developments in urban areas to provide a gravity feed sewage system directly connected to the main sewage system.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: No. It is not possible to provide gravity-feed sewarage systems in all cases. To act in the manner suggested would involve drainage authorities and developers in unnecessary expense or sterilize areas otherwise suitable for development.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what effect the discharge of screened sewage effluent into a burn is known to have upon the wildlife existing in such a burn; and what hazards to human health such discharges are known to cause.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The effects of screened sewage discharges on a burn will depend on the composition, duration and frequency of the discharge as well as the dilution afforded by the receiving waters. Fresh water fauna and flora differ widely in their tolerance of pollution. However, regular episodes of pollution could be expected to result in changes in the diversity and relative abundance of species.

As far as hazards to human life are concerned, few dangers are likely to arise unless, in an extremely rare case, the burn is the source for a potable untreated water supply downstream of the discharge. Then there would be a potential threat from bacterial and viral contamination of the water supply.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated difference in cost between providing the proposed new residential development at Springhill farm in Shettleston constituency with (a) a gravity feed sewage system or (b) a sewage pumping system; and how the total costs are divided between local authority and developer.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Detailed cost information for specific schemes is not held centrally. The division of costs between the authority and a developer is for the council to determine in line with its responsibilities under the Sewerage (Scotland) Act 1968.

Roads

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish an annual maintenance and condition survey of roads in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Information on the condition of motorways and trunk roads and on maintenance works undertaken is already published annually in "Scottish Transport Statistics". Information on the condition of non-trunk roads is a matter for local roads authorities and is not published though a random sample survey is undertaken each year under the direction of the County Surveyors' Society.

Rating Reform

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many local authority employees in each of the regions of Scotland have been used in work relating to the implementation of the Community Charge (Scotland) Act; what the total cost of this has been to date; what effect this has had on other local authority services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: [holding answer 22 December 1988]: This information is not held centrally.

A8

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the A8 between Baillieston and Newhouse will be upgraded to a motorway linking both sections of the M8.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The proposed extension of the M8 between Baillieston and Newhouse is currently planned to be carried out in two phases. It is hoped the necessary preparatory work for both phases will be completed in time to allow construction to start on the first phase between Baillieston and Shawhead in late summer 1991 and on the second phase between Shawhead and Newhouse in early summer 1994. The actual timing of starts will depend upon priorities within, and the finance available for, the trunk road programme at those dates.

Irish Citizens

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many citizens of the Republic of Ireland occupy public sector housing in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of citizens of the Republic of Ireland whose names are on electoral registers in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 December 1988]: There is no requirement for the nationality of an elector to be entered in the electoral register. My right hon. and learned Friend has made no estimate of the number of citizens of the Republic of Ireland whose names are on electoral registers in Scotland, but table 2 in the country of birth volume of census 1981 Scotland shows that some 26,500 such citizens aged 16 and over were resident in Scotland at that time.

Scottish Special Housing Association

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the groups with which the Scottish Special Housing Association has discussed or intends to discuss the transfer of housing stock in each district council area of Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 December 1988]: A number of general inquiries have been addressed to the Scottish Special Housing Association about the transfer of ownership or management of parts of its housing stock. Such inquiries are commercial in confidence. Until such interested parties declare they are interested publicly it would be improper and inappropriate for the SSHA or the Government to announce them. Most inquiries are from existing housing associations mainly interested in small numbers and in particular parts, of the SSHA housing stock in their areas.

Two firm proposals for the purchase of housing stock already have been made public. The SSHA has confirmed that a proposal by a group of senior SSHA managers, advised by Price Waterhouse, to purchase up to 25,000 houses in SSHA's south region and Fife region is not acceptable in its present form. A separate proposal by Grampian Homes Ltd. to purchase up to 3,600 houses in the district council areas of Aberdeen, Banff and Buchan, Gordon, Kincardine and Deeside and Moray which includes proposals to establish ownership corporations and housing associations, is still under consideration and it will be for Scottish Homes to respond to this proposal after 1 April 1989.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what authority the Scottish Special Housing Association has entered into discussions for the transfer of housing stock and tenants to other landlords; what involvement his office has had in this; what safeguards for tenants he has demanded of the Scottish Special Housing Association; and what is his general policy on stock transfer ahead of 1 April 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 December 1988]: Public sector landlords, including the Scottish Special Housing Association, have always had the legal right to make voluntary disposals of houses to other landlords, subject to the Secretary of State's consent. A number of inquiries have been made about the transfer of SSHA houses, but the Scottish Office has not given its approval to any proposals for the voluntary sale of SSHA stock. It has been made clear to such inquirers that the diversification of housing tenure is one of the Government's objectives and that the Government welcome appropriate moves to reduce the dominant public sector share of the housing stock in particular localities. However inquirers have been told that they must submit any proposals to the SSHA.

I have also made it clear to SSHA that it must follow the guidelines issued recently to local authorities on the handling of such voluntary sales or the Secretary of State would not be prepared to consent to any disposals. In particular, the Secretary of State would need to be satisfied prior to any possible sale that there had been proper arrangements for consultations with tenants. The Secretary of State would also wish to consider carefully the value for money of any proposal put forward by SSHA or Scottish Homes and all relevant matters affecting the interests of tenants. More detailed guidance on the particular factors relevant to proposed sales of SSHA, or in future Scottish Homes, stock is being prepared by the Scottish Development Department.

I have concluded, with the agreement of the SSHA, that it should be for Scottish Homes to respond formally to proposals for voluntary transfers of stock after 1 April 1989. Scottish Homes will of course be required to consult tenants if it wishes to proceed with a proposal, and depending on the outcome, would then have to seek the Secretary of State's consent and satisfy the Secretary of State that the interests of tenants were safeguarded.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Plastic Bullets

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals have been charged or disciplined for misuse of plastic bullets in Northern Ireland for each year since they were first used.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information is not available in the form requested. However, since 1978 a total of five RUC officers have been charged with disciplinary offences and one with a criminal offence arising from the use of plastic baton rounds. One officer was found guilty of disciplinary offences and the remainder were found not guilty. Records are not maintained centrally of minor disciplinary action taken at divisional level against RUC officers and information about such action could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Since 1972 three soldiers involved in two separate incidents have been charged for misuse of plastic bullets in Northern Ireland; in one case the charge was dismissed and the other case, involving two soldiers, has not yet been finalised. Information about soldiers disciplined as a result of incidents involving the use of baton rounds is not available.

Quangos

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table or list in the Official Report showing for each quango in Northern Ireland, the name of the chairman, the name of the chief executive, the length of each period of appointment of each and the present salary paid where the posts are paid posts and indicating for how many periods of appointment each such chairman and chief executive has been serving.

Mr. Ian Stewart: A table giving this information has been placed in the Library.

Social Fund

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the operation of the social fund.

Mr. Needham: The discretionary part of the social fund has been operating for over seven months and some patterns and trends have emerged.

Applications for social fund loans have been increasing steadily and by the end of October loan payments totalling £5·857 million had been made. The majority of loan applications have resulted in awards and a minority have been turned down on grounds of low priority.

The take-up of community care grants has been lower than expected and the end of October grants amounting to £1·198 million had been paid. Some measures to increase take-up have already been implemented, the demand for grants is gradually increasing, and we are considering possible further steps to increase awareness of the availability of grants amongst those people for whom they are intended.

The review system is operating satisfactorily. About 23 per cent. of people refused a payment have asked for a review of the decision at the social security office. In just under a quarter of the cases reviewed the original decision has been changed. By the end of October some 109 people had exercised their right to ask for a further review by the social fund inspector. In 67 out of 99 cases decided, the original decision was confirmed by the inspector.

Extradition

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make representations to the Foreign Minister of the Republic of Ireland to ensure that any future applications for extradition of persons to Britain will be dealt with promptly and in accordance with the laws of Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: The Government of the Republic of Ireland are well aware of our views. We remain in close touch on extradition matters and, indeed, on all matters affecting Anglo-Irish relations, through the auspices of the Anglo-Irish inter-governmental conference, which is the appropriate forum for such discussions. We shall continue to work together to ensure that extradition is an effective method of bringing fugitives from Northern Ireland to justice.

Action for Community Employment

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many action for community employment scheme sponsors are presently operative in each of the 26 district councils in Northern Ireland; how many reductions in places have been required in each district council area to date; and how many further reductions are envisaged.

Mr. Viggers: The number of ACE sponsors presently operating in each of the 26 district council areas is as follows:

	Number
Antrim	3
Ards	7
Armagh	10
Ballymena	8
Ballymoney	3
Banbridge	4
Belfast	147
Carrickfergus	3
Castlereagh	2
Coleraine	6
Cookstown	2
Craigavon	16
Derry	31
Down	12
Dungannon	4
Fermanagh	37

There are no plans to reduce the number of places in any of these projects.

DNA Profiling

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether all mouth samples taken for DNA profiling purposes in criminal investigations are obtained by means of a swab taken from between the lip and the gum.

Mr. Tom King: Yes. I can confirm that all mouth samples for DNA are obtained by inserting a sterile cotton wool swab into the area between the lip and gum and rubbing the swab over the inner surfaces. No scraping is involved.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times DNA profiling has been employed in criminal investigations of (a) scheduled offences, distinguishing between intimate and non-intimate and between those cases where the sample was taken voluntarily and those where the sample was taken without the consent of the suspect and (b) in non-scheduled offences.

Mr. Tom King: DNA profiling has been employed in the criminal investigation of three scheduled offences and three non-scheduled offences.

In one scheduled case in which the technique was used before the statutory provision in the Criminal Justice Act 1988 came into force, it was not necessary to invite the suspect to provide any sample either intimate or non-intimate. In two cases (one scheduled and one non-scheduled) the suspects offered both intimate and non-intimate samples. In the remaining three cases, one of which was scheduled, the suspects offered only an intimate sample.

In these latter five cases, all the samples provided were taken with the consent of the suspects concerned.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times mouth samples have been taken for DNA profiling purposes in connection with criminal investigations of scheduled offences, distinguishing between non-tissue cases where the sample was taken with the consent of the suspect and those where the suspect refused consent.

Mr. Tom King: Mouth samples have been taken from nine persons in connection with criminal investigations of scheduled offences. In all cases, these samples were taken with the consent of the person concerned.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many records of DNA samples obtained in the course of investigations of (a) scheduled offences and (b) non-scheduled offences have been (i) kept and (ii) destroyed.

Mr. Tom King: No records of DNA samples obtained in the course of investigations have yet been destroyed. In two cases, one scheduled and one non-scheduled, convictions were secured. The remaining four cases are either awaiting court action or are still actively under investigation.

Higher Education

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate expenditure on higher education as a percentage of the Northern Ireland gross domestic product for the past five years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The available figures are as follows:

Financial year	Gross domestic product (1) £ million	Higher education expenditure excluding student support (2) £'000s	(2) as a percentage of (1)
1983-84	5,291	60,177	1·137

1987-88	7,388	80,008	1·083

Income Support

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many 16 and 17-year-olds who previously received income support were transferred to a bridging allowance after new benefit rules were introduced in September for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Some 986 young people transferred from income support to bridging allowance in September 1988.

Full-time Education (Statistics)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the latest figures for the percentage of 16 to 19-year-olds involved in full-time education for each education and library area in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested.

Top-up Loans

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representation he has received concerning the proposed introduction of top-up loans to Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Representations have been received from four Members of Parliament, local representatives of the National Union of Students and other student bodies.

Mandatory Awards

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a breakdown of the number and value of mandatory awards provided by each education and library board over the past seven years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The information is as follows:

Student Awards

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate expenditure on student awards as a percentage of the Northern Ireland gross domestic product for the past five years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Students awards are made up from mandatory and discretionary awards paid by education and library boards and teacher training, youth service, adult education, postgraduate bursaries and studentships paid by DENI. The information is as follows:

Financial year	Gross domestic product (1) £ million	Amount spent on awards (2) £	(2) as percentage of (1)
1983-84	5,291	32,607,673	0·616

Water Pollution

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidents of water pollution by farm wastes were (a) recorded in each of the years 1980 to 1987 and 1988 to date in Northern Ireland, (b) attributable to pollution by (i) silage effluent and (ii) slurry and (c) the subject of warning letters and prosecutions; and how many prosecutions were successful.

Dr. Needham [holding answer 21 December 1988]: Details of recorded water pollution incidents arising from agriculture for the years 1980 to 1987 inclusive are as follows:

Year	Slurry — Water Act (NI) 1972				Silage — Water Act (NI) 1972
	Number of Incidents	Prosecutions	Successful Prosecutions	Warning Letters	Number of Incidents	Prosecutions	Successful Prosecutions	Warning Letters

1987	467	17	15	8	479	90	88	43
1988	331	9	9	3	158	—	—	9

The figures show the action taken by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland for those cases referred to it for consideration for prosecution under the Water Act (Northern Ireland) 1972. Figures for 1988 incidents are based on returns for the first two quarters.

Income Support

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the numbers claiming income support at each social security office in Northern Ireland; what are the numbers of dependants of such claimants; and what are the numbers of these claimants receiving pensions and sickness or invalidity benefit.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 December 1988]: The number of income support claimants and those also receiving retirement pension in each social security office on 31 August 1988, the latest date for which statistics are available, is as follows:

Social security office	Number of claimants claiming IS at 31 August 1988	Number of claimants receiving retirement pension at 31 August 1988

[1] All figures are at 31 August 1988 except for Strabane where the latest figures available are at 31 May 1988.

Information regarding the number of dependants and those income support claimants also receiving sickness or invalidity benefit is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

RUC and UDR (Religions)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the breakdown of the number of Protestants and Catholics serving in (a) the Royal Ulster Constabulary and (b) the Ulster Defence Regiment in each year from 1969 to the present date.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1988]: Although arrangements are currently being made to introduce monitoring of the religious denomination of members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and its Reserve, the database has not yet been completed. The information requested is therefore not available. However, I understand that currently about 10 per cent. of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and full-time Reserve is believed to be Roman Catholic.

It is not policy to maintain separate statistical records of religious beliefs of Army personnel in any regiment or corps. However, over the last five years it is estimated that the number of Roman Catholics in the Ulster Defence Regiment has formed between 2 and 3 per cent. of that regiment's strength.

Prevention of Terrorism

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a breakdown of those people arrested under the Prevention of Terrorism Act for each year since 1974 (a) at ports, (b) at airports, (c) in their homes, (d) in other places; and if he will provide a breakdown of these figures between men and women detainees.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 8 December 1988]: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost since it would involve the examination of nearly 10,000 individual records. The number of persons arrested in Northern Ireland each year under the Prevention of Terrorism Acts since 1974 is as follows:

	Persons arrested
[1]1974	Nil
1975	8
1976	246
1977	162
1978	155
1979	162

[1] From 29 November.
[2] Up to 30 November.

Short Brothers

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about progress with the privatisation of Short Brothers.

Mr. Viggers (pursuant to his reply of 22 December 1988): An information memorandum relating to Short Brothers plc which has been prepared to assist potential purchasers in formulating preliminary proposals is being issued today by Kleinwort Benson, financial advisers to the Government. Prospective purchasers will have until 10 February to submit their proposals, and are also being asked to supply information about their present activities and future strategy. A shortlist of possible purchasers will thereafter be drawn up. In my statement of 21 July, 1988, I said that Her Majesty's Government's preference was to sell the company as a whole and it is on this basis that proposals are now being invited from private sector interests.

The Government will continue to stand behind the company in the period leading to privatisation. When the company is privatised, the Government intend to ensure that it will have a capital structure which will enable it to operate without the need for Government assurances to creditors, and such assurances will be withdrawn so far as new obligations are concerned.

The company's accounts for the year ended 31 March 1988 have also been placed in the Library today.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Resettlement Unit

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many items of correspondence he has received on the work of the resettlement unit since 1 July from hon. Members.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Five.

Unemployed People (Spouses)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimates exist of the number of registered unemployed supplementary benefit recipients whose spouses worked for less than 30 hours per week at the most recently available date prior to April; and what estimates exist of the number of registered unemployed income support recipients whose spouses work for less than 24 hours per week at the most recently available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available.

Social Security Reform

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what figures or estimates exist for the numbers of claimants receiving unemployment benefit, income support or national insurance credits who will cease to do so as a result of section 6 of the Social Security Act 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Those receiving unemployment benefit on 2 October 1988, when section 6 of the Social Security Act 1988 came into operation, will continue to receive benefit under the old contribution conditions for up to a year under transitional arrangements. People claiming unemployment benefit after October 1988, whose claims do not link with a claim before that date, have to satisfy the new contribution conditions. It is estimated that, in a full year, some 350,000 claimants for unemployment benefit will not satisfy the new contribution conditions. Of these some 300,000 will qualify for income support. All those continuing to sign at the unemployment benefit office can receive national insurance credits subject to the usual rules, whether or not they are entitled to benefit.

Office Work Loads

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the regionally aggregated monthly figures for office workloads by category of claimant at the most recently available date and at the equivalent periods over the last two years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is given in the following tables. Table 1 shows Income Support/Supplementary Benefit workloads by category of claimant at 30 November 1988 and at equivalent dates in 1987 and 1986. Table 2 shows Contributory Benefit workloads at the same dates.

Any comparison drawn between the 1988 figures provided in this reply and similar information for dates prior to 11 April 1988 should be qualified by the fact that final Supplementary Benefit figures contain possible inaccuracies.

Homelessness

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report his response to the document entitled "The First Four Weeks," which was forwarded to him before Christmas by the Scottish Council for the Single Homeless.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are giving urgent and careful consideration to the recommendations contained in "The First Four Weeks" as well as to concerns expressed by other organisations representing the interests of young people.

Hostels

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response he has made to the recommendations in the pamphlet entitled "Hostel Crisis," published by the Special Needs Housing Forum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 27 October at column 337.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the proposals he has to replace his Department's payments for board and lodging with housing benefit; if he has projected what impact these changes will have on hostels in Nottingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From April 1989, people in ordinary board and lodging accommodation will be able to claim income support for their living expenses and housing benefit for their accommodation costs in the same way as other people in rented accommodation. On payments to people in hostel accommodation, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 27 October at column 337.

Benefits

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the reasons for the delays in payment of state pensions and other state benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are not aware of any general delays in the payment of state pensions and other state benefits. If, however, the hon. Member is aware of difficulty in a particular case, I should be grateful for the details.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the amount of benefits to which people in Peckham are entitled but which is not claimed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Survey-based estimates of the numbers of people who may be eligible for benefit but who do not claim are available only at national level.

Training Allowance

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether YTS trainees who lose their entitlement to training allowance after three weeks sickness are entitled to sickness benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Young people who have not worked prior to starting on the YTS scheme will not qualify for sickness benefit when they fall sick, as they will not satisfy the contribution conditions for that benefit. YTS trainees with a previous record of employment may qualify, but only if they have paid sufficient contributions at the relevant time. In appropriate cases, child benefit or income support may be payable.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines he has issued to benefit officers to ensure that unemployed income support claimants who receive training allowance on beginning employment training continue to receive housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Unemployed income support claimants who undertake employment training have their training allowance set at a level which ensures continuing payment of income support.

DSS local offices have been instructed to ensure that the local authority is aware of the continuance of income support during employment training. Existing entitlement to housing benefit should not, therefore, be affected.

Board and Lodging

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether 18 to 25-year-old claimants who participate in employment training and who are living in board and lodgings are exempt from the restrictions and the time limits that would normally apply to board and lodging payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Financial limits on board and lodging payments apply to all claimants receiving income support. The restrictions that apply to boarders under 25 do not apply to those who participate in employment training.

Child Benefit

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be (a) the gross and (b) the net cost of raising child benefit in a full financial year in line with the rise in tax thresholds in 1989-90 uprated according to the statutory formula.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available. The general index of retail prices for December 1988, on which the calculations would be based, has not yet been published.

Pensioners

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of retirement pensioners receiving supplementary benefit during the three months prior to April 1988 and income support in the first three months following the change.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. However, in November 1987, about 1·6 million retirement pensioners were claiming supplementary benefit. A comparable figure for income support is not yet available. For information about the numbers of income support claimants in receipt of a pensioner premium, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) on 14 December 1988 at column 588. [Source: November 1987 Quarterly Statistical Enquiry.]

Christmas Bonus

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he took to ensure that the Christmas bonus was paid to all those stated to be entitled to it in the notes issued with his press release dated 2 December 1988, including men of 60 to 64 years receiving income support with a pensioner premium.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The notes issued with the press release in question regrettably contained an error, for which the Department has since apologised. The Christmas bonus is not paid to men aged 60 to 64 who receive income support with a pensioner premium. The 1988 bonus has been paid to all those people entitled to receive it.

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what resources have been made available for implementation of sections 1, 2, 3, 7 and 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We are currently engaged in discussions with representatives of health and local authorities on the resources required to implement section 7 of the Act, which we agree is our next priority. No decisions have yet been reached about resource requirements. Similar work on the implementation of sections 1, 2 and 3 will follow.

Section 11, which will be implemented this year, will have no resource implications outside Government.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what consultations he has had with local authorities and voluntary organisations on the implementation of section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultations he has had with local authorities and voluntary organisations on the implementation of section 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Discussions have taken place between officials and local authority representatives and are continuing. Officials will consult other relevant bodies as necessary.

Attendance Allowance

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the amount of attendance allowance which is not claimed.

Mr. Scott: The OPCS surveys of disabled people have collected data about the incidence of different types and degrees of disability and also about the receipt of benefits. Using these data, OPCS has shown (see for example table 3.8 in "OPCS Disability Surveys Report 2: The financial circumstances of disabled adults living in private households"—a copy of which is in the Library) the proportions of people receiving attendance allowance at various levels of severity of disability. It should, however, be borne in mind that, since 1985, when these data were collected, there has been a one-third increase in the number of AA recipients. It is not possible to use the OPCS data about the incidence of disability to identify with sufficient certainty the total number of people who would satisfy the eligibility criteria for AA, and thereby to estimate the amount of benefit not claimed.

Family Incomes

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish figures comparing the equivalence scales used in households below average incomes with the equivalent scales implied in the income support allowances and premiums, taking a single householder as the reference point; and if he will publish a table comparing the equivalent incomes derived from the households below average incomes scale with equivalent incomes derived from the income support scale, taking a single non-householder on income support with £33·40 as the reference point and the following family types for comparison: (a) a married couple, (b) a couple with one child aged under one year, (c) a couple with two children aged seven and 10 years, (d) a couple with three children aged two, four and six years, (e) a couple with four children aged five, seven, 10 and 16 years, (f) a lone parent with one child aged six months and (g) a lone parent with two children aged seven and 10 years;

(2) if he will publish the equivalence scale used for Households Below Average Incomes: A Statistical Analysis, taking the single adult non-householder as the reference point; and if he will also publish the equivalent incomes implied by that scale for each age group, taking the income support allowance for a single person aged 25 years or over as the reference point.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: [holding answers 29 and 30 November]: Figures providing the information requested have been put in the Library. It is important to recognise that, for the detailed reasons given in the commentary preceding the figures, comparisons between the households below average income equivalence scales and the income support relativities must be interpreted with caution.

Child Benefit

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, what is the cost in 1988-89 and 1989-90 of a 50p increase in child benefit assuming (a) corresponding increases in income support rates (b) corresponding increases in family credit rates (c) no corresponding increases in income support rates and (d) no corresponding increases in family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 21 December 1988]: In income support the amount provided for each child is reflected in full in the personal allowance, and child benefit is taken fully into account as income. So increasing both child benefit and the income support personal allowance by 50p would give an overall increase of 50p per child. In family credit, child benefit is not taken into account, and the support for each child is the total of child benefit and the family credit child rate, so an increase of 50p in child benefit and in the family credit child credit rates would give an overall increase of £1 per child.

The estimated net benefit cost in 1988-89 and in 1989-90 of a 50p increase in child benefit, assuming:

(a) a corresponding increase in the Income Support child rates and no change in Family Credit child rates, would be around £300 million in each year;

(b) a corresponding increase in the Income Support child rates and Family Credit child credit rates, would be around £330 million in each year;

(c) a corresponding increase in the Family Credit child credit rates and no change in Income Support rates, would be around £280 million in each year;

(d) no change in Income Support or Family Credit child credit rates, would be around £250 million in each year.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of claimants of unemployment-related benefits from whom benefit was withheld on grounds of lack of availability for work in each year since 1980; and if he will express this figure as a percentage of all claims disallowed in a manner consistent with the annual report of the chief adjudication officer.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on claims disallowed by adjudication officers is in the table:

Disallowances of unemployment-related benefits made by Department of Employment adjudication officers

	Number of disallowances —availability and restricted availability	Total number of disallowances	Disallowances under availability and restricted availability as percentage of total

1987	101,774	1,078,819	9
1988	48,290	480,723	10

Note: Figures for 1988 are for the period 1 January 1988-30 June 1988 inclusive.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the grounds of refusal of unemployment-related benefits in a manner consistent with the reports of the chief adjudication officer; and if he will give the number of claims disallowed on each ground in each year since 1980.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested on claims disallowed by adjudication officers is in the table.

[1] Figures for 1988 are for the period 1 January 1988 to 30 June 1988 inclusive.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of claimants of unemployment benefit in each year since 1980 who were claimants for a second or subsequent period of unemployment benefit; and if he will express this figure as a percentage of the total number of successful claimants of unemployment benefit in each year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that information is not available in the form requested.

ENERGY

Renewable Energy

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the per capita expenditure on renewable energy in (a) Greece and (b) Spain; and what was the expenditure by his Department in the comparable period.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Per capita expenditure on renewable energy in Greece and Spain in 1987 is estimated to be around £0·43 and £0·20 respectively. Based on the Department's expenditure on renewable energy over the same period, the United Kingdom figure would be £0·26. The Department's programme is, however, a collaborative programme with industry and the generating boards, and substantial work not directly connected with our programme is under way. Taking all these expenditures into account, the per capita expenditure on renewable energy in the United Kingdom is around £0·70.

North Sea Offshore Installations

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply of 15 December, Official Report, column 682, if he will undertake an assessment of whether all the parties to joint operating agreements who will ultimately be responsible for the costs of abandonment of North sea offshore installations will be able to meet their commitments; whether sureties were taken out to ensure that there would be no cost to the taxpayer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: One of the primary purposes of the Petroleum Act 1987 was to protect the taxpayer against the risk of the parties to joint operating agreements (the JOA parties) defaulting on their financial obligations for abandonment. The obligations upon the JOA parties are joint; if one or more of them defaults, the others must meet the whole obligation. Further, the Secretary of State may extend the abandonment obligation to associates, including parents and subsidiaries, of the JOA parties. Once an abandonment programme has been approved, if the Secretary of State is not satisfied that a company will be capable of discharging its obligations under it, he may require the company to take such action as he may specify, for example forfeiting oil to the Government.

Sellafield (Reprocessing)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the expected total costs of the Sellafield thermal oxide reprocessing plant once completed; and what is the estimated running costs of its first year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The expected total cost of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield is some £1,800 million. It is too early to estimate precisely the running costs for its first year.

Sellafield (Radioactive Emissions)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the expected minimum and maximum levels of radioactive emissions per year from the Sellafield plant; what type of emissions they will be; and what radioactive levels will make up such emissions.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Discharges of radioactivity from the Sellafield plant are subject to conditions of authorisations issued by the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

The current authorisations in respect of discharges to sea and air came into force on 1 July 1986 and 1 January 1988 respectively. Both include limits on the quantities of specified radionuclides and groups of radionuclides to be discharged within specified periods of time. They also require the use of the best practicable means to limit the activity of the waste discharged.

BNFL publishes annual reports on radioactive discharges and monitoring of the environment. These contain full details of the types and quantities of radionuclides discharged from Sellafield (and other BNFL sites), and demonstrate compliance with the authorisations. The most recent report, in respect of 1987, was published in November 1988; this is in the Library of the House.

Sellafield (Radioactive Waste)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much low, medium and high-level radioactive waste is presently stored at Sellafield; in what form; and what is its final destination.

Mr. Michael Spicer: At 1 January 1988 a total of 1,250 cu m of high-level waste and 33,000 cu m of intermediate-level waste were stored at Sellafield. Low-level waste is not stored, but is disposed of to the Drigg disposal site as it arises.

High-level waste is stored as a liquid in high-integrity, cooled, stainless steel storage tanks. Intermediate-level wastes, in the form of fuel element cladding, sludges, resins, flocs and other miscellaneous solid waste from reprocessing operations, are stored in tanks, silos and purpose-built stores.

It is intended to vitrify high-level waste and to encapsulate intermediate-level waste in a cement matrix for further interim storage. Both processes will commence in mid-1990.

Reprocessing contracts with overseas customers entered into since 1976 include an option to return the resulting wastes to those overseas customers and we intend that these options should be exercised. Other wastes will be disposed of in suitable geological repositories in the United Kingdom.

Energy Efficiency Office

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what level of funding the Energy Efficiency Office has received in the years 1985-87 inclusive.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 8 December 1988 at column 327.

Appliances (Energy Consumption)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends to introduce legislation requiring labelling of appliances and their energy consumption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 16 May 1988 at column 299.

Sellafield (Plutonium Discharges)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, how much plutonium, in what chemical forms and by which routes, has been discharged into the Irish Sea by the Sellafield plant (a) since it began operating and (b) in each of the years since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Liquid discharges from Sellafield contain very small quantities of nuclear materials, including plutonium. These are discharged to the sea through pipelines provided for the purpose, and are subject to conditions of authorisations granted by the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

The amount of plutonium included in these discharges since operations began in 1951 until the end of 1987 was 730 terabequerels, expressed as alpha activity.

The quantity discharged in each of the years since 1974 is as follows:

Year	Plutonium (alpha activity) terabequerels
1974	46
1975	44
1976	47
1977	36
1978	58

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he will make available the regulatory framework under which the electricity supply industry in England and Wales will operate after privatisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have today made copies of the draft licences available to Members of the Standing Committee considering the Electricity Bill, and placed copies in the Library of both Houses accompanied by explanatory notes. The draft licences are those for public electricity suppliers (PESs), which will be the successors to the area electricity boards, with an obligation to supply in their designated areas; other, "second tier", suppliers who may be licensed to supply specific premises or types of premises; generators, including independent generators and the successors to the Central Electricity Generating Board; and the transmission company.

The licences contain conditions restricting the level of charges (for the PES and transmission companies) and providing for third parties to have access to the transmission or distribution systems of all licensees. All licences contain conditions relating to technical and operating standards, arrangements for ensuring security of fuel supply and consultation on employee health and safety. All except the licences for second tier suppliers and independent generators contain conditions prohibiting cross-subsidy or discrimination, and the PES licence additionally makes important provision for aspects of consumer relations and standards of service. All licensees will be required to provide information to the Director General of Electricity Supply and to pay fees to cover regulatory costs.

War-time Cremations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what estimates he has made of the amount of fuel to be required for war-time cremation by local authorities;

(2) pursuant to his reply of 25 November, Official Report, column 47, how he proposes to make special provision of fuel stocks for use by local authorities for war-time cremation; what is the nature of the fuel to be provided; how much will be available; and when he anticipates issuing guidance to local authorities on the matter.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These questions are hypothetical, but we anticipate no difficulty in meeting the requirements of local authorities in this matter.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the provision of fuel stocks for use by local authorities in the carrying out of war-time cremations was last discussed at the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's petroleum planning committee; and when the matter was last discussed with the petroleum industry's oil emergency committee.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The matter has not been discussed with the oil industry emergency committee. Discussions of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation petroleum planning committee are classified.

HEALTH

Grading

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by district health authority in England and Wales the number of midwives on each grade of the previous grading structure and the number of midwives on each grade of the new grading structure, identifying separately hospital-based midwives and community midwives.

Mr. Mellor: The information which is available is given in the tables. The information which is held centrally does not identify hospital-based midwives and community midwives separately.

Northallerton Health Authority

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will place in the Library copies of the latest annual accounts and financial returns for Northallerton health authority;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the capital and revenue sums spent on all hospitals in the Northallerton health authority area for each of the past five years.

Mr. Mellor: Figures of revenue and capital expenditure for the Northallerton health authority are shown in the table.

For more detailed information on regional capital spending within the district and for copies of the authority's latest annual accounts and financial returns, which are generally presented to health authorities meeting in public session, I suggest the hon. Member contact the chairman of the Northallerton health authority.

[1] Provisional figures (ie as yet subject to audit).
Source: Annual financial accounts of Northallerton Health Authority and Yorkshire Regional Health Authority (RHA).
Notes to the table:
1. The total expenditure figures include expenditure on hospital, community health and other services.
2. The total capital expenditure figures include sums in respect of district schemes recorded in the annual accounts of the Yorkshire RHA most of which relates to hospital services but details are not held centrally.
3. Revenue and capital expenditure incurred by Yorkshire RHA for the region as a whole is excluded. Expenditure on family practitioner services which is accounted for by family practitioner committees and cannot strictly be attributed to particular districts is similarly excluded.

Meningitis

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research the Government are undertaking to discover how meningitis spreads.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Health is funding a prospective case control study of meningococcal disease in eight west country health districts by Dr. Stanwell-Smith, Bristol and Western health authority. This study is looking at individual susceptibility to meningococcal disease.

The main agency through which the Government support medical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives its grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science. The MRC supports work into the epidemiology of meningitis at Oxford (Professor R. Moxon), and into the immunobiology of meningococcal infection at the MRC clinical research centre (Dr. Taylor-Robinson): the latter studies could, in the longer term, provide information on the spread of the disease.

Health in Old Age

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement of the progress of the health in old age programme; and what plans have been made for the future funding of the programme and its three constituent parts.

Mr. Freeman: The health in old age programme is one of the several programmes run by the Health Education Authority concerned with adult and family health, and exists to encourage a positive response to old age and to support informal carers of elderly people. It gives support to the King's Fund informal carers' project, the Centre for Health and Retirement Education and the Age Well Campaign. The authority is currently considering the programme's future funding arrangements as part of its operational planning for 1989-90.

Midwives (Vacancies)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the present vacancies for midwives in each of the regional health authorities covering London.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold such information centrally.

National Census

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will include a question about Gaelic and Welsh-speaking ability in any future national census to be conducted in England.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's proposals for the 1991 census in Great Britain were published in a White Paper (Cm. 430) on 19 July 1988. They do not include a question about Gaelic and Welsh-speaking ability in England.

There were many topics put forward which were considered but not included. Requests to include a question on Celtic languages throughout Great Britain and asking the Welsh language question outside Wales were excluded from the Government's proposals mainly because the arguments for including them were not considered strong enough compared with the cases for questions on other topics.

The topic content of any census after 1991 will be a matter for consideration at the appropriate time.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if households included in the proposed test census will be informed in advance that participation is voluntary.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. An information leaflet which states that the test is voluntary, but that its success depends on co-operation, will be delivered to each household in the test areas about two weeks before the day of the test.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the parliamentary constituencies affected by the test census planned for April.

Mr. Freeman: The areas selected for the 1989 census test cover parts of the following constituencies: Tooting, Wimbledon, Mitcham and Morden, Perry Barr, Small Heath, Scarborough, Edinburgh South, Edinburgh Central, East Lothian, Roxburgh and Berwickshire.

Product Licences (Parallel Imports) Scheme

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements exist for the inspection of overseas manufacturing sites for products that are licensed under the Product Licences (Parallel Imports) Scheme in those European Community countries that are not a party to the pharmaceutical inspection convention.

Mr. Mellor: Overseas manufacturing sites for products which are the subject of the product licences (parallel imports) scheme are subject to inspection by the member state concerned. Where the pharmaceutical inspection convention does not apply, United Kingdom inspectors have made some informal visits in association with the local inspectorate.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many holders of licences granted under the Product Licences (Parallel Imports) Scheme also hold manufacturers' licences which enable them to re-package and re-assemble products the original packs of which are in a foreign language.

Mr. Mellor: Sixteen.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to how many products granted product licences (parallel imports) are (a) dispensed in the manufacturer's original packs which contain information for patients in a foreign language and (b) have to be re-packaged by the importing wholesaler or dispensing pharmacist to overcome language problems.

Mr. Mellor: Holders of product licences (parallel imports) are required to remove any instructions containing information for patients in a foreign language unless such instructions form part of an approved multilingual leaflet including English.

Licence holders must also arrange for all products to be relabelled to comply with the United Kingdom statutory requirements for labelling of medicinal products.

All information received about alleged breaches of the above requirements will be followed up.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance his Department has given to local authorities concerning the provision of information under section 9 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what measures his Department is taking to ensure that information on services for disabled people under section 9 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 is made available in ethnic minority languages; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what measures his Department is taking to ensure that information on services for disabled people under section 9 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 is made available on tape or in braille or on sign videos; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Local authority circular LAC(87)6, issued in March 1987, gave general guidance on section 9 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, together with other sections implemented on 1 April 1987. Local authorities are best placed to develop information services to meet the needs of disabled people, including the provision of braille text and leaflets in ethnic minority languages when appropriate. The Department recently issued circular LASSL(88)8 to both local and health authorities which drew attention to the importance of access to information about local and national services. Copies of both circulars have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department is taking to monitor the implementation of section 4 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Department's social services inspectorate is engaged in several exercises to monitor those sections of the Act so far implemented, which include section 4.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he plans to ensure that the report made by him under section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, when implemented, will be used to develop good community care practice.

Mr. Mellor: Section 11 of the Act requires that an annual report be laid before Parliament containing information about the development of health and social services in the community for people with a mental illness or a mental handicap, and about the numbers of such people who are receiving treatment in hospital. Copies of the report will be made available to those statutorily responsible for providing relevant services, including community care.

AIDS

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a list of the publications and media in which AIDS warning advertisements have appeared since the inception of the campaign.

Mr. Mellor: The Government's AIDS public education campaign has comprised advertising in all the main media. The Health Education Authority, which assumed responsibility for the campaign in October 1987, has continued the practice of placing specifically targeted advertising in those parts of the media where it is most likely to achieve its particular purpose. Selected AIDS advertising has appeared in the following media since inception of the campaign:

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial help has been given to each of the regional health authorities covering the Greater London area to help in the treatment and counselling of people suffering from AIDS.

Mr. Mellor: The amounts of additional central funding allocated to the four Thames regional health authorities towards the costs of AIDS and HIV-related services for the financial years 1986-87 to 1989-90 are given in the table.

	1985-86 £ million	1986-87 £ million	1987-88 £ million	1988-89 £ million	1989-90 £ million

Social Work Training

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to improve the quality and availability of practice placements on social work training courses.

Mr. Mellor: The improvement of the quality and availability of practice placements on social work training courses is primarily a matter to be resolved by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW) together with the colleges who provide qualifying courses, local authority social services departments and other service agencies.

We have taken the view that practice placement provision is an issue requiring priority attention. Additional funds provided to the central council this year for improvement to qualifying training included £700,000 for improvements to planning and cooperation between colleges and employers. We shall provide further funding for practice placement improvements over the next 5 years. Our training support programme initiative will encourage local authority social services departments to appoint placements organisers and supervisors. And in the coming financial year we shall be providing funds for a research project in this area.

Yorkshire Health Authorities (Staffing)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the latest available figures for staffing levels in each of the district health authorities within the Yorkshire region in the following categories (a) ancillary, (b) nursing, (c) medical and dental, (d) administrative and clerical and (e) other grades, including ambulance staff and technicians; and if he will indicate the percentage increase on or decrease which has occurred in each category within the previous year.

Mr. Mellor: The latest figures available centrally are listed in the tables.

Radiation Overdoses (Compensation)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what formula is being used by the assessors deciding on levels of compensation for patients in the Royal Devon and Exeter hospital who received overdoses of radiation; what considerations will be taken into account; and whether the payments are a de facto acceptance of negligence.

Mr. Freeman: It is for Exeter health authority to decide the levels of compensation in the light of its own independent advice on the clinical effects of the overdose of radiation on individual patients.

The health authority has accepted that the treatment of patients on the miscalibrated machine amounted to a breach of its duty of care towards those patients.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the implications for health care services within the district of the obligation to make compensation payments to those damaged by excessive radiation at the Royal Devon and Exeter hospital funded from within their own resources.

Mr. Freeman: All health authorities are expected to budget for contingencies. It is too soon to judge the likely provision to meet the costs of compensation arising from the radiation incident at Exeter. No adverse effect on health care services is expected.

Salmonella

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of salmonella enteritidis have been reported on a monthly basis for the last two years; and how many of those cases were phage 4.

Mr. Freeman: Monthly statistics are not available. Provisional figures by quarter are as follows:

Salmonella reports (cases and excreters) reported to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre by quarter

	Total salmonella enteritidis	Total phage type 4
1986

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the cases of salmonella food poisoning connected with eggs which were referred to in his Department's recent press advertisements, giving the number of people affected and the most likely source of the eggs in question in each case.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The number of reported cases of salmonella food poisoning connected with eggs in the first 10 months of 1988 is as follows:

	Number of people affected
January	27
February	—
March	—
April	60
May	302
June	159
July	207
August	145
September	114
October	127

Information is not available on the most likely source of the eggs in question in each case.

St. Bartholomew's Eye Hospital

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether St. Bartholomew's eye hospital is able to operate on children with eye cancer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: St. Bartholomew's eye hospital is able to operate on children with eye cancer. Last year there were 325 surgical admissions and 267 day cases. There were 64 new out-patient referrals and 378 follow-up attendances.

Water Pollution

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest information as to whether the public's health was in any danger in July in Cornwall due to polluted water supplies.

Mr. Freeman: Anyone drinking the polluted water immediately after the incident last July may have experienced a range of unpleasant symptoms, but these should have abated rapidly and completely. There is no reason to expect any long-term adverse effect to health. However, in view of some continuing anxiety within the local population, we will be asking independent experts to look at the evidence, and publish the resulting conclusions and advice.

Pay Beds

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy on use of National Health Service pay beds in the light of the report, a copy of which has been sent to him, entitled "Laing's Review of Private Health Care."

Mr. Mellor: Policy remains unchanged on NHS pay beds authorisation, which is made only when a demand is demonstrated, and after wide local consultation. Pay beds are not reserved for the exclusive use of private patients.

Until the introduction of the Health and Medicines Act, charges for private patients were set at a level sufficient to recover the full cost of treatment. The Act allows charges to be set at commercial rates to increase income available to health authorities for further improving the health service.

Drug Prices

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on (a) the over-the-counter price in Spain of 5ml of the drug Otosporin, (b) the price charged to the National Health Service and (c) the price charged by pharmacists when the drug is obtained by private prescription.

Mr. Mellor: The price reimbursed by the NHS when a community pharmacist or dispensing doctor supplies Otosporin is £4·09 for a 5ml bottle, before any account is taken of discounts obtained by dispensers. Hospitals may buy at prices negotiated separately with the manufacturer. When the medicine is obtained by private prescription, the price is not controlled by the Department; it is set by the pharmacy.

We have no information on prices paid in Spain.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to require all drug companies supplying drugs listed in the British National Formulary to inform his Department of the prices that they charge for those drugs in other European Community countries.

Mr. Mellor: The European Commission has announced that it intends to compile a data bank containing the prices of medicines in each member state, and we shall study this with interest.

Electoral Statistics

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many electors per right hon. or hon. Member there were in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland in each of the last 30 years; how many right hon. and hon. Members were returned by each country in the same period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

Abortions

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of abortions by method for the North East Thames regional health authority for the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: The table shows the provisional number of notifications received in respect of abortions performed on women usually resident in North East Thames regional health authority by method for the June quarter of 1988 (the latest period for which data are available), and the final figures for 1987, which were published on 15 December 1988.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why the report into cervical cancer screening at the Women's hospital, Liverpool, was issued with pages 3 to 22 omitted; if he will cause those pages now to be published; whether he will now authorise an independent public inquiry into the original incident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The report to which the hon. Member refers was commissioned by and is the property of the Liverpool health authority. In order to obtain the full co-operation of those involved, the authority gave an undertaking that their evidence would remain confidential. The unfortunate incidents in Liverpool have already been investigated extensively by an internal review, the facts established and action taken locally to ensure that there is no repetition of the occurrence. In the circumstances we are not convinced that a further inquiry is warranted.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he proposes to conduct a survey of health authorities regarding provision of vaccination for hepatitis B and the estimated costs involved.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to do so. As my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Health indicated previously to the hon. Member on 12 December 1988 at column 450 we have asked health authorities to use their occupational health services to decide on priorities for this vaccination in the light of the advice issued to them last summer. Our understanding is that many authorities have taken the necessary steps, and others are following suit.

Alexander Fleming House

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health at what cost work on the re-cladding of Alexander Fleming house has been carried out; and what architectural advice was obtained before the decision to re-clad was taken.

Mr. Freeman: The re-cladding of Alexander Fleming house, which is a rented building, forms part of a proposed major refurbishment planned by the landlord. Costs and architectural advice are matters for him and final decisions have yet to be taken about the plan.

Handbook of Environmental Health

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of the outside consultant involved in the preparation of the "Handbook of Environmental Health"; what is the extent of the consultation exercise being carried out; if he will identify local authority organisations and professional associations invited to provide comments; and what is the likely publication date of the handbook.

Mr. Freeman: A handbook of practical guidance about environmental health in war has been prepared in draft form by a retired senior army medical officer from an earlier document written by a former medical officer of environmental health.

The consultation exercise now being carried out involves a number of Government Departments with related responsibilities. Thereafter, local authority associations and medical and professional organisations with emergency planning interest will be consulted.

The publication date of the document will depend upon completion of the consultation process.

Water Supply

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the regional and district health authorities at whose request additional chemicals are currently being added to the public water supply.

Mr. Freeman: The Department does not hold such information centrally.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what amount of his Department's budget is set aside to meet the liabilities of health authorities in respect of effects of chemicals added to the public water supply at their request.

Mr. Freeman: None. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has, however, indemnified water authorities carrying out fluoridation at the request of health authorities against the unlikely event of damages being awarded in respect of adverse effects on a person's health caused by fluoridation.

Vaccination

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if MMR is available for individual clinicians in (a) the Lewisham and North Southwark district health authority area and (b) in the Camberwell district health authority area if they decide to vaccinate a child who is not 15 months old or four to five years old.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. The ages quoted by the hon. Member are those which we have recommended should receive MMR vaccine in the advice that we have issued to health authorities and individual doctors. I understand that Camberwell and Lewisham and North Southwark are among those also making the vaccine available for other children on request from the doctor concerned.

Railway Signalling

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requests or instructions he has made to London Regional Transport or London Underground Limited which has resulted in changes in the methods of maintenance, or replacement, of signalling equipment on their railways; what changes in practice have already taken place; and what further changes are now planned.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made no requests nor given instructions to London Regional Transport or London Underground Limited about signalling equipment. Any change in practice involving either maintenance or replacement of such equipment is a matter for London Regional Transport, bearing in mind that undertaking's statutory duty to provide services with due regard to efficiency, economy and safety of operation.

Emissions

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to introduce legislation setting emission standards for vehicle exhausts at least as stringent as those prevailing in the United States for nitrogen oxides, carbon monoxide, hydrocarbon and particulates.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We shall be implementing the revised standards for all these pollutants recently agreed in the European Community. For large vehicles over 2,000 cc, the new limits are equivalent to United States standards. For cars under 2,000 cc, the standards are slightly less stringent. They will require the fitting of at least an oxidation catalyst to most cars. We believe that the Community, in adopting these standards, has struck the right balance between environmental, consumer and industrial concerns.

Fuel Economy

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures his Department has been taking and intends to take to improve the fuel economy of cars.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Between 1978 and 1987 (the latest figures available) fuel economy improved by over 20 per cent. We expect this trend to continue.

To help buyers the Department publishes six monthly the booklet "New Car Fuel Consumption—The Official Figures" listing the fuel economy of the majority of new cars as determined by the official test. The booklet also provides advice on how to drive for fuel economy. The official fuel consumption figures have to be displayed on all new cars offered for sale and quoted in advertisements which refer to fuel economy.

Inland Waterways (Freight Grants)

Mr Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the total number of applicants for grants and the number of grants made under section 36 of the Transport Act 1981 in respect of facilities for freight transport on inland waterways and the date, purpose and amount of the last grant made; and if he will make a statement concerning any changes made in the terms and conditions applicable to such grants since their introduction.

Mr. Portillo: There have been five grants awarded towards facilities for freight transport on inland waterways under section 36 of the Transport Act 1981. As not all inquiries lead to a formal application for grant it is not possible to state the total number of applicants since the scheme began, but only one formal application has been refused. The last grant was made in October 1986 for petroleum traffic and totalled £65,000. There have been no changes to the terms and conditions attached to these grants, but a review about three years ago on value for money grounds led to some budget adjustment.

Municipal Bus Companies

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the first municipal bus company to be sold.

Mr. Portillo: Two English local authority owned bus companies have already been sold: Portsmouth City

Transport and Yorkshire Rider. In Wales, Taff-Ely Transport has been sold, and the Secretary of State for Scotland has recently approved the sale of Grampian Regional Transport.

Arrests

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest available annual figures for (a) total arrests, (b) total passenger journeys and (c) arrests as a percentage of passenger journeys on the London Underground.

Mr. Portillo: The number of arrests for crimes on the London Underground in 1988 was 2,618. The number of recorded crimes during that period was 16,436 and the number of passenger journeys is estimated to have been 814 million. This gives a ratio of one crime for every 49,500 passenger journeys.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest available annual figures for (a) total arrests, (b) total passenger journeys and (c) arrests as a percentage of passenger journeys on British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: The British Transport Police report that there were 6,354 arrests in the 1987 calendar year in relation to offences on British Rail. The total number of passenger journeys on BR in 1987-88 was 727·2 million. There was one arrest every 114,448 passenger journeys. As a percentage, this is 0·000874 per cent.

British Rail (Investment)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the fixed asset investment in the United Kingdom of the British Railways Board for each year since 1978-79; and what is the planned investment for each year to 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: The figures for the British Railways Board's fixed asset investment in the United Kingdom for the years 1982-83 to 1986-87, the estimated outturn for the 1987-88 and forecasts for 1988-89 to 1990-91 were published in the 1988 public expenditure White Paper (CM 288-11). Earlier years' figures are taken from previous public expenditure White Papers. All are cash.

	£ million
1979-80	388
1980-81	334
1981-82	305
1982-83	273
1983-84	270
1984-85	343
1985-86	402
1986-87	428
1987-88	540
1988-89	641
1989-90	655
1990-91	678

Updated figures including forecasts to 1991-92, which are significantly higher than those contained in the 1988 public expenditure White Paper, will be published shortly in the 1989 public expenditure White Paper.

European Community Funds

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy with respect to seeking the establishment of a medium-term transport infrastructure fund by the European Economic Community and as to the nature of projects to be covered by such a fund.

Mr. Portillo: The Government do not support the European Community Commission's proposal to create a medium-term transport infrastructure fund. The Community has a role in identifying worthwhile schemes of Community significance, and sound means of funding these already exist.

A1 Felton Bypass

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the purpose of the works now being carried out on the A1 Felton bypass Coquet viaduct.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The works are connected with the installation of a new gas main from Morpeth to Alnwick. Statutory undertakers have the right to install apparatus within the highway boundary. The Coquet viaduct offered the only suitable crossing.

M63 (Widening)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects completion of the M63 road widening programme in the Barton bridge area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In about 12 months. The widening across Barton high level bridge finished in December. Work continues on the final contract south of the bridge.

Assessment Studies

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all property in areas covered by the London assessment studies owned by his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is not the Department's practice to publish the addresses of individual properties that it owns. The Department owns some 1,300 properties in London. All have been acquired in connection with schemes in the national road programme. It is not possible to identify those in the assessment study areas without disproportionate cost.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many oral parliamentary questions he has answered by written reply because the question was not reached at Question Time, for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Of the 640 questions tabled for oral reply by the Department in the calendar year 1988, 499 received written replies.

British Transport Police

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details by London British Rail and underground stations of reported incidents to British Transport Police in the last 12 months.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not held centrally in the form requested.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what records are kept of the number of occasions when Metropolitan police are summoned to the assistance of British Transport Police.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not recorded.

London Underground (Fires)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions in the last 12 months the London Fire Brigade has been called to attend upon reported fires within the London underground system; and what increase or decrease this represents on the previous 12 month period.

Mr. Portillo: London Underground Ltd. does not have figures in precisely the form requested for the relevant period. However, I understand that the numbers of incidents of fire and smoke recorded by London Underground were 844 in 1987 and 1,248 in 1988, following the Kings Cross fire and with the agreement of the London Fire Brigade, London Underground Ltd. issued revised instructions to staff on calling the fire brigade; these required the brigade to be summoned immediately to all reported or suspected outbreaks of fire or smoke, no matter how small, on any part of the Underground system.

Oil Pollution

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many oil pollution incidents in British territorial waters have been recorded by his Department in each of the past five years; what were the ecological consequences of each incident; what was the total cost in each case for the rescue of endangered sea birds and general clear-up; and how many incidents were traced to the polluter;

(2) what resources are available to his Department to monitor and prosecute owners and masters of vessels dumping oil in British territorial waters;

(3) how many prosecutions have followed cases of oil pollution caused by vessels in British territorial waters in each of the last five years.

Mr. Portillo: The numbers of oil pollution incidents in British territorial waters in the period 1985-88 reported to the Department's marine pollution control unit (MPCU) are as follows:

	Number
1985	30
1986	24
1987	33
1988	43

These relate to shipping casualty, ship operational and shore installation spillages or threatened spillages. The figures for 1987 and 1988 reflect the extension of territorial sea limits from three to 12 miles. The 1984 figure is not readily available.

Assessing the ecological consequences of an oil spill is not a matter for my Department. However, the Nature Conservancy Council advises me that usually it is not possible to make an overall assessment of all the various factors involved. This is not only because all incidents are different and affect wildlife to a different extent, but also because of the difficulty of obtaining the necessary information about species and habitats affected, particularly when the incident occurs offshore.

The rescue of seabirds affected by oil is undertaken by voluntary organisations such as the RSPCA and SSPCA. Details of their costs are not held centrally. Over the four-year period, the MPCU has incurred costs of around £90,000 in responding to pollution or threat of pollution to United Kingdom coastal, fishery, or sea bird interests arising from spillages of oil in British territorial waters. Details of costs incurred by local authorities on beach clean-up are not held centrally.

The likely source of pollution was identified on 65 occasions, but only 16 of these related to possible illegal ship operational discharges.

All masters of ships and pilots of military and civil aircraft, including those engaged by the MAFF and DAFS on fishery protection, are required to report sightings of oil in British territorial waters. The MPCU's contracted remote sensing aircraft carries out surveillance patrols of the shipping lanes around United Kingdom coasts in addition to responding to major spillages of oil reported by other agencies. The United Kingdom is also a member of the fourteen European nation memorandum of understanding on port state control whereby participating states undertake to inspect vessels arriving in their ports reported as suspected of having made an illegal discharge in the course of their voyage. In addition vessels entering their ports are regularly inspected to check inter alia, oil record books for any evidence of illegal oil discharges. In United Kingdom these are carried out by the Department's marine surveyors.

The numbers of prosecutions for illegal oil discharges from ships in British territorial waters in each of the last five years are:

	Number

Stratford Station (Congestion)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report on the congestion at Stratford, London E15, station during peak travelling times caused by the single turnstile passenger exit; and what arrangements exist for the evacuation of the station in event of an emergency.

Mr. Portillo: As these are matters for the managements of British Rail and London Underground, I will not call for a report. But I understand that in an emergency, both turnstiles could be set to the "out" direction and a gate opened to allow passengers to leave quickly.

Aircraft Sabotage Warnings

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what time and on what date in December 1988 he was first aware of the warning issued by the Federal Aviation Administration in respect of a possible sabotage threat to a Pan Am flight from Europe to the United States;

(2) at what level in his Department decisions are taken regarding the passing on to airport and airline operators of warnings of possible sabotage threats received from overseas;

(3) at what time and what date in December 1988 his Department passed to the BAA notices of possible sabotage threats issued by the Federal Aviation Administration of the United States;

(4) what restrictions in respect of circulation were placed upon warnings received by his Department in December 1988 from the Federal Aviation Administration regarding a possible sabotage threat to a Pan Am flight from Europe to the United States.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the statement given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

"Crime on the London Underground"

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 20 December, Official Report, column 158 how much of the £15 million made available by the Government to London Underground Limited has been expended on safety measures recommended in his report "Crime on the London Underground".

Mr. Portillo: To date, London Underground Limited has spent £3 million of the Government grant of £15 million on measures to improve passenger security and prevent vandalism and graffiti. The remaining funds are budgeted to be spent by the end of 1989-90 on further measures which will reflect experience with the pilot schemes currently under way.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the Police Committee on progress made in the implementation of recommendations in the 1986 Report, "Crime on the London Underground", regarding the organisation of the British Transport Police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: An increase in the complement of the London Underground division of the British Transport Police from 350 to 400 officers, and the extension of local area policing as piloted successfully in the Stockwell area, have been agreed. I understand further that the British Transport Police committee is keeping the organisation of the force under review in the light of the 1986 crime report, the recent inspection of the London Underground division by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary and the report of the investigation into the King's Cross fire.

Property Purchase

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why his Department allowed the London borough of Greenwich to take possession of 3 Camrose street SE2, before the purchase of the property had been completed and the agreed price had been paid.

Mr. Channon [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The current occupation of 3 Camrose street is a matter for the vendor as its purchase by the Department on the basis of vacant possession has not yet been completed.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department agreed terms for the purchase of 3 Camrose street SE2, following the service of a planning notice under section 193 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971; why his Department has refused to meet the vendor's legal and professional costs; and when the agreed price was paid.

Mr. Channon [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Negotiations between the vendor and the district valuer were concluded in August. The district valuer subsequently advised that the vendor's professional fees should be included in the agreed price which is payable on completion, which is expected to take place next month.

Motorcycle Casualties

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motorcycle casualties were involved in road traffic accidents for the latest available year; what proportion of these were provisional licence holders; what proportion resulted from accidents involving cars and what were the primary causes of accidents; and what proportion of these resulted from a single vehicle accident and what were the primary causes of accident.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest year for which figures are available is 1987. There were 45,801 motorcycle user casualties in road accidents in Great Britain—42,288 riders and 3,513 passengers. Of these, 723 were killed and 13,173 were seriously injured.

It is not known what proportion of these motorcycle riders were provisional licence holders; in 3 per cent. of accidents involving motorcycles the motorcycle was displaying an L plate.

Of the motorcycle user casualties, 21 per cent. occurred in single vehicle accidents, and 61 per cent in accidents involving a motorcycle and a car.

The causes of accidents are not recorded on the STATS 19 reporting forms. Of the accidents involving a car and a motorcycle, we know that the car was turning right in about 40 per cent. of cases.

Drivers (Fitness)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of drivers aged (a) 17 to 60 years, (b) 60 to 69 years, (c) 70 to 79 years, (d) 80 years and over referred to the driver and vehicle licensing centre in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and in each case, what percentage of referrals led to a disqualification from driving.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figures available are as follows:

	Driver notifications[1]	Application containing a medical declaration	Other notifications
1982	13,709	107,930	12,696
1983	17,929	118,872	13,814
1984	22,755	116,502	12,393
1985	27,810	111,618	14,004
1986	36,040	144,126	15,489
1987	48,086	144,734	10,864
1988[2]	53,884	140,496	14,126

[1] During currency of licence.
[2] To end of November.

Many take heed of the advice on the driving licence about the legal obligation to notify disabilities and rightly refer themselves. Of these, many retain the right to drive. I will write to my hon. Friend to give fuller details about the statutory powers available to the Secretary of State in this area of driver licensing and how the driver and vehicle licensing centre carries out its medical investigations of drivers.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of drivers referred to the driver and vehicle licensing centre (a) by the driver themselves and (b) on behalf of another driver, with a condition believed to affect fitness as a driver in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and in each case what percentage of referrals led to a disqualification from driving.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not available.

Orange Badges

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his best estimate of the number of parking spaces available in each local authority area to holders of an orange badge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The provision of parking spaces reserved for orange badge holders is the responsibility of individual local authorities. Information on the number provided by each authority is not held centrally.

British Rail (Chairman)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to replace the chairman of British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: No, Sir.

M4 (Barrier Replacement)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current progress on the programme of barrier replacement on the M4; and what information he has on the standard and quality of the original installation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Pursuant to the reply to my hon. Friend on 6 December, (Official Report, column 97), 79·3 km of safety fencing on the central reserve of the M4 in England have already been replaced. A further 5·2 km is scheduled for replacement this financial year, and 3·8 km next financial year. Up to 61·3 km will be dealt with in subsequent years.

Despite the fact that the Department engaged a consulting engineer to supervise their installation, we know that some original concrete post footings were not constructed to the shape specified by the Department.

TRRL research report 75, published in 1986, showed that the safety fencing involved is nonetheless still performing better than its design requirements.

Replacement of safety fencing can with greatest safety and with convenience be done when other major maintenance is being carried out. There is no case for faster replacement given that the safety fencing continues to perform as intended.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the number of personal equity plans taken out in 1988 and in 1987.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many personal equity plans have been in existence in each year since the instigation of the scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1987 over 250,000 plans were taken out and in 1988 it is estimated that a further 100,000 plans were started.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to the Exchequer to date of personal equity plans; and what is the anticipated cost in each of the next three years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The available information is as follows:

	Estimated cost of income tax relief £ million
1986-87	negligible
1987-88	5
1988-89	15

Costs in future years are expected to increase.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many organisations have offered personal equity plans; how many have ceased to do so; and if he will list them by name.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Since the scheme was introduced in 1987, 129 organisations have offered personal equity plans. Details are not held on the number and names of organisations which have ceased to offer plans.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many personal equity plan holders have a marginal tax rate of (a) 25 per cent. and (b) 40 per cent.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that the information is not available.

Interest (Taxation)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax is paid annually by zero rate tax payers on bank and building society interest.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1987-88, about £450 million of the composite rate tax accounted for by building societies, banks and other deposit-takers was due in respect of interest that would not have been liable to tax in the hands of its recipients in the absence of a composite rate system.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the sums invested so far in BES in (a) manufacturing, (b) services and (c) property for 1988-89 so far.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested is not yet available centrally from official sources.

Airports (Intimate Searches)

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many full and intimate searches of women passengers have been undertaken by the customs authorities at Gatwick airport in the last relevant 12 months, and how many proved negative;

(2) how many full and intimate searches of women passengers have been undertaken by the customs authorities at Heathrow airport in the last relevant 12 months, and how many proved negative.

Mr. Lilley: Customs set up central records on search of person in July 1987 but these records do not identify separately searches of men and women.

For the period 1 July 1987 to 31 March 1988, the numbers of persons intimately searched were 206 at Gatwick and 166 at Heathrow. Drugs were recovered in 29 instances at Gatwick and 19 at Heathrow. These figures include four cases where drugs were found before the search was undertaken and 30 where drugs were found afterwards (for example, concealed internally by smugglers but recovered only after the search).

Senior Personal Secretaries (Civil Service)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average hourly rate of pay to senior personal secretaries in the Civil Service (a) within the London weighting area and (b) outside that area.

Mr. Brooke: Senior personal secretaries in the Civil Service are not paid on an hourly basis. Their pay with effect from 1 April 1988 is as follows:

London (a) £	Outside London (b) £
10,924	9,174
11,341	9,591
11,758	10,008
12,331	10,581

The London salary includes inner London weighting of £1,750; the rates for the intermediate and outer London zones are £1,000 and £725 respectively. All senior personal secretaries are eligible for a lower rate skill supplement of £404 per annum. A local pay addition of up to £700 per annum is payable at the discretion of Departments to meet particular recruitment and retention needs.

Taxes and Benefits

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in the 1989-90 financial year of introducing a reduced rate tax band of (a) 20 per cent. and (b) 15 per cent. on the first £1,500 of taxable income; and what would be the effect on the net income of (i) a single person, (ii) a couple where the wife is not working and (iii) a couple where the wife is working and paying tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1989-90 the full year income tax cost of a reduced rate of 20 per cent. on the first £1,500 of taxable income would be about £1·7 billion. A reduced rate of 15 per cent. for the same band of taxable income would cost about £3·4 billion in a full year.

Estimates are based on a projection of the 1986-87 survey of personal incomes and are provisional. The costings assume that 1988-89 tax allowances are indexed to 1989-90 by 6·25 per cent. in accordance with the assumption in the Autumn Statement.

The effects on the net incomes of different types of family are given in the table. It is assumed in each case that earnings are sufficient to use the whole of the £1,500 reduced rate band.

(ii) Married couple with wife not working	1·44	2·88
(iii) Married couple with wife working and paying tax	2·88	5·77

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much in real terms the average annual tax payment of a man with no allowances and reliefs other than the married man's tax allowance earning (a) £5,000, (b) £10,000, (c) £15,000 and (d) £20,000 has increased or decreased since 1978-79.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The table compares the income tax liability of a married man under the current tax regime and under the 1978-79 regime indexed to 1988-89 levels according to the statutory formula.

Annual income tax liability of married man with no reliefs or allowances other than the married man's allowance

20,000	5,370·75	3,976·25	1,394·50	26·0

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide figures for 1979 and 1986 showing, on an equivalent income basis, the proportion of each of the following household types in each quintile of (a) original and (b) post-tax income as defined in the annual articles in Economic Trends on the effects of taxes and benefits for (i) one adult with children, (ii) two adults with children, (iii) non-retired without children and (iv) retired.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that these figures could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, some of the information requested is available for 1985 on page 113 of the July 1987 edition of Economic Trends.

Mr. Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table which sets out for a two-child family on (a) half average earnings, (b) three quarters average earnings, (c) average earnings, (d) one and a half average earnings, (e) twice average earnings, (f) five times average earnings and (g) 10 times average earnings the increase in net income to be derived from (i) a 1p cut in the standard rate of income tax in the 1989-90 financial year. (ii) an increase in personal allowances, over and above indexation, which incurred the same cost as a 1p cut in standard rate income tax, (iii) an increase in child benefit which incurred the same cost as a 1p in standard rate income tax (both assuming and not assuming similar increases in the income support and family credit children's rates separately) and (iv) the introduction of a reduced rate tax band of 20 per cent. at the same cost as a 1p cut in standard rate income tax, showing what band of income the reduced rate would cover, and (v) the introduction or a reduced rate tax band of 15 per cent. at the same cost as a 1p cut in standard rate income tax, showing what band of income the reduced rate would cover.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 December 1988]: The effects of the proposed changes on a family with two children are shown in the table. The table contains information based on direct revenue or expenditure cost in a full year at 1989-90 levels of income. Estimates are based on projections of the 1986-87 survey of personal incomes in line with forecasts in the Autumn Statement. On this basis, each of the measures would cost £1·53 billion in a full year that is the full year figure underlying the first year cost of a 1p cut in the basic rate of income tax, £1·40 billion, shown in the Autumn Statement. The income tax changes are compared with the 1988-89 tax regime indexed to 1989-90 according to the statutory provisions. The income tax calculations assume that all personal allowances would increase by the same percentage and disregard any changes in social security income related benefits to which the family may be entitled. It has also been assumed that the only tax relief or allowance available to the married couple is the married man's allowance and that the wife has no earnings.

[1] Average earnings assumed to be £273·1 per week, an increase of 7·5 per cent. on 1988-89 in line with the assumptions used by the Government Actuary for reviewing national insurance contributions (paragraph 3.02 of the Autumn Statement 1988).
[2] Assuming no change in income support and family credit children's rates.
[3] Assuming corresponding changes in income support and family credit children's rates.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate, on the same basis as the ready reckoner published in the Autumn Statement, what the effect is on a one-earner, two-child family of spending in 1989-90 the same sum on (a) a 1p cut in the basic rate of income tax, (b) raising income tax thresholds above their indexed levels and (c) raising child benefit, assuming (i) no change in income support rates and (ii) corresponding changes in income support rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) today.

Mr. Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report up-to-date figures treating child benefit as negative income tax and using 1988-89 prices but otherwise on the same basis as those provided to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) in the Official Report, 27 March 1987, columns 310-38.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 December 1988]: The information is given in the following tables:

Notes to tables

Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the tax units have no other tax reliefs apart from the standard allowances. Earners, including working wives, are assumed to pay Class 1 NI contributions at the contracted in rate. The figures for NI contributions are financial year averages.

2. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. The levels of average earnings in each year are given below:

	£ per week
1978-79	92·80
1979-80	109·30
1980-81	131·40
1981-82	145·90
1982-83	157·40
1983-84	171·00
1984-85	185·00
1985-86	198·50
1986-87	213·40
1987-88	233·60
1988-89	254·10

[1] Assuming growth of 8¼ per cent. on 1987-88.

3. The two earner married couple is assumed to have joint earnings of the various multiples of average earnings. In calculating disposable income it is assumed that the joint earnings are split between husband and wife in the ratio 60:40.

4. For the married couple with two children, child benefit is treated as a negative income tax. For this purpose, financial year averages are used for child benefit.

5. The estimates of indirect taxes are derived from the 1985 family expenditure survey and are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. Estimates cannot reliably be made outside the income range for which figures are shown. There are also quite wide variations in spending patterns between households with similar incomes and composition and, because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between the estimates obtained from different family expenditure surveys.

Departmental Spending

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures showing the public spending outturn for each Government Department and total in (a) each year from 1978-79 until 1989-90 plans expressed in constant 1988 prices, (b) the annual percentage change for each Department and the total and (c) the overall percentage change for each Department and the total.

Mr. Major: A breakdown of the public expenditure planning total by Department for the years 1978-79 and 1983-84 to 1989-90 in real terms (base year 1987-88), from which percentage changes can be derived, was given in table 1.10 of the 1988 Autumn Statement. Corresponding figures for the years 1979-80 to 1982-83 will appear in the 1989 public expenditure White Paper (table 21.4.3) which is due to be published towards the end of the month.

Share Issues

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has regarding the amount of new capital raised through share issues by companies quoted on the London stock exchange in each of the last five years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The value of net issues of share capital by United Kingdom listed public companies for the period 1984-88 are given in the table:

	£ million
1984	1,440
1985	4,625
1986	7,816
1987	15,432
1988	5,877

These figures relate to new money raised in sterling on the main United Kingdom stock market by issues of ordinary and preference shares. Small amounts were also raised on this market by companies registered abroad. The figures do not include privatisations that did not raise new money for the company.

Amounts raised by companies on the unlisted securities market, which was launched by the stock exchange in November 1980, were as follows:

	£ million
1984	137
1985	170
1986	301
1987	958
1988	620

More money has been raised during 1984-88 than in any previous five-year period.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many oral parliamentary questions he has answered by written reply because the question was not reached at Question Time, for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Brooke: In 1988, a total of 914 oral questions were tabled to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, of which 787 received a written reply. These figures do not include oral questions which were subsequently withdrawn, unstarred or transferred to other Departments.

Local and National Expenditure

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing expenditure by function for (a) housing, (b) other environmental services, (c) education and science, (d) health and personal social services and (e) social security, broken down into expenditure accounted for by (i) local authorities and (ii) central Government for each year between 1968-69 and 1990-91 in both cash and real terms.

Mr. Major [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Detailed information on public expenditure by function and Department was given in the introductory tables to the departmental chapters in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" Cm 288-II. These tables also differentiated between expenditure accounted for by local authorities and central Government. Information on trends in cash and real terms since 1978-79 were given in the historical trends section of Cm 288-I, which also gave the GDP deflators from which other real terms figures can be calculated. Similar information updated to take account of the 1988 public expenditure survey will appear in the departmental booklets and chapter 21 of the 1989 public expenditure White Paper due to be published in January.

ENVIRONMENT

River Pollution

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 20 per cent. of water authorities sewage treatment works in England and Wales where poor performance has given rise to recent deterioration in river quality.

Mr. Moynihan: Water authority returns detailing those sewage treatment works which in 1987 failed to comply with discharge consent conditions are available in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions there have been under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 in respect of alleged river pollution since the implementation of the Act; and if he will list such prosecutions in date order.

Mr. Moynihan: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 8 December at col. 276.

Sewage

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the major programmes of investment applicable to sewage works in coastal towns to bring their works up to standard; and in each case what provision there is for primary and secondary sewage treatment.

Mr. Moynihan: The detailed programmes of investment for upgrading all sewage treatment works are still being developed by individual authorities in discussion with my Department. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on December 7 to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) by my hon. Friend the Minister for Water and Planning at column 199.

Water Pollution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the statutory standard for water in order to safeguard the public from the hazards of polluted rivers, lakes and reservoirs, in view of their increasing use for inland water sports and recreation.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to his questions on Tuesday 10 January at columns 504-505.

Water Companies (Asset Values)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact on the asset values of water companies of the failure of copper pipes due to water corrosion caused by the non-lime retaining waters supplied (a) in Nottingham and (b) in England.

Mr. Moynihan: None. Water authority mains are unlikely to be affected.

Football

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made any estimates of those attending the following numbers of Football League matches in a season (a) one to 10, (b) 11 to 20, (c) 21 to 30, (d) 31 to 40 and (e) more than 40.

Mr. Moynihan: No.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions there will be under the football membership scheme for football fans who support more than one team.

Mr. Moynihan: It will be for the body appointed to run the scheme to consider the way in which the scheme will work in detail and submit proposals to the Secretary of State for approval. The report of the working party I chaired recommended that members of the scheme should be able to attend any designated match.

Towpaths

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the use of canal towpaths for horse-riding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The management of towpaths is the responsibility of their owners. Most canal towpaths are owned by the British Waterways Board, whose byelaws require permission to be obtained for horse riding. The board's policy is to permit horse riding only where it would be compatible with other uses.

Water Authority Chairmen

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to change any of the water authority chairmen.

Mr. Moynihan: No.

Housing Action Trust (Leeds)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish the report prepared for him by PIEDA consultants on the proposed housing action trust in Leeds, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: We have not yet received the report from the consultants studying the area proposed for a housing action trust in Leeds.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy in deciding whether to designate Halton Moor estate, Leeds, as part of a housing action trust, to take into account the report prepared by local tenants, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Trippier: We shall take account of all local views in deciding whether to establish individual HATs. In particular, the Secretary of State may not make an order designating a HAT area unless a majority of tenants approve the proposal in a ballot.

Rate Support Grant

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 21 December, Official Report, column 268, if he will list for each local authority its share of the accumulated reduction in rate support grant since 1978-79 at 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Ridley: It is not possible to estimate what grant individual authorities would have received in each of the last 10 years had the total of rate support grant been higher without knowing what decisions would have been made by the Government about the factors which affect the distribution of grant and by authorities about their level of spending.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will show for each local authority the rate support grant paid in each year since 1978-79, expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms at 1988-89 prices; and what percentage of the council's total expenditure in each year this represented.

Mr. Ridley: The information will be placed in the House of Commons Library today.

Water

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what representations have been made by his Department to the European Commission regarding the incident at Lowermoor water treatment works on 6 July 1988;

(2) what representations have been made by his Department to the World Health Organisation regarding the incident at Lowermoor water treatment works on 6 July 1988.

Mr. Ridley: None.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken by his Department subsequent to his meeting with the chairman of the Lowermoor incident liaison group on 21 December.

Mr. Ridley: No action has been taken by my Department subsequent to the meeting of my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health with the chairman of the Lowermoor incident liaison group and the hon. Member for Cornwall, North (Mr. Neale) on 21 December. I am satisfied that the undertakings which my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health gave in relation to the local health concerns will meet the principal worries of people in the Camelford area.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what correspondence he has received from the European Commission in connection with European law and the provisions in the Water Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: A copy of the Water Bill has been sent to the European Commission. If the Commission raises any points we shall consider them.

Grant-related Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was (a) the total and (b) the percentage year-on-year change in the grant-related expenditure of (i) the Inner London Education Authority and (ii) the Metropolitan police, in each year from 1981-82.

Mr. Ridley: The information is as shown in the following table:

	Total GRE (£ million)		Change in GRE on previous year (per cent.)
	ILEA	Metropolitan police	ILEA	Metropolitan police

[1] Adjustment.

Note: In the table above an adjusted 1988-89 GRE is shown for ILEA. The adjustment reflects the transfer of higher education establishments to the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council from 1 April 1989.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the percentage change in grant-related expenditure for each local authority between 1987-88 and 1988-89, ranked from biggest increase to biggest decrease.

Mr. Ridley: The information is as shown in the following table:

Rates

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish the total rate rise in poundage and percentage terms, at ratepayer level, in every local authority in England between 1981-82 and 1987-88, whole period, ranked from biggest increase to smallest increase, by class;

(2) if he will publish the overall percentage change in the non-domestic rate poundage in each rating authority in England between 1981-82 and 1988-89, showing the percentage increase which would have occurred in each if the non-domestic rate poundage had increased in line with the retail price index over this period, showing the difference between the two percentages for each authority;

(3) if he will list in descending order all English local authorities on the basis of the percentage change in their local rate or precept from 1981-82 to 1988-89, showing in each case the percentage change in current expenditure in the same period.

Mr. Ridley: I have today placed the information in the Library.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the overall average unrebated domestic rate bill paid by householders in (a) England and (b) England and Wales in each year since 1966-67.

Mr. Ridley: The estimated figures are as follows:

Average (unrebated) domestic rate bills[1]

	England £	England and Wales £
1966-67	41	40
1967-68	41	41
1968-69	42	42
1969-70	44	44
1970-71	47	46
1971-72	54	53
1972-73	61	60
1973-74	66	66
1974-75[2]	77	74
1975-76	94	92
1976-77	103	100
1977-78	119	116
1978-79	131	128
1979-80	155	152
1980-81	199	195
1981-82	245	239
1982-83	282	276
1983-84	303	296
1984-85	323	316
1985-86	351	344
1986-87	401	392
1987-88	429	420
1988-89[3]	468	459

[1] Average unrebated rate bills are derived from average domestic rateable values per hereditament and the average domestic rate poundages levied by local authorities.

[2] Figures up to 1973-74 are not comparable with those for 1974-75 and later years. This is due to the change of local authorities' responsibilities in 1974, in particular the transfer of water and sewerage services from local authorities to water authorities.

[3] The figures for 1988-89 are provisional.

Thoresby Hall

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken in respect of the proposed break-up and disposal of the contents of Thoresby hall, Nottinghamshire; what discussions he has had with English Heritage and British Coal about the future of the hall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Disposal of the contents of any listed building is a private matter for their owners. I have ensured that British Coal and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy are aware of the representations made by English Heritage and others about the future of the hall. Any applications for listed building consent for works to alter or demolish this grade I listed building would need to be referred to my Department.

Porter v. Honey

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement of the implications for policy on estate agents boards of the judgment delivered in the House of Lords on 1 December in the case of Porter v. Honey.

Mr. Howard: Their Lordships were invited to answer the following certified question:

"If an estate agent, instructed to sell or let a residential property, displays a board outside the property no other being at that time displayed, does he commit an offence if another agent (to his knowledge or without it) thereafter displays a second?"

Their answer was unanimously in the negative and the appeal by Mr. A. H. Porter, against judgment given in the Divisional Court on 30 March, was allowed.

I welcome this judgment and their Lordships' view, expressed by Lord Griffiths, that they were,

"unable to impute to the Secretary of State or Parliament the intention that an estate agent in the position of the appellant should be held guilty of a criminal offence".

I hope that all estate agents and vendors will observe the rule that only one advertising board is displayed on any premises for sale or letting, so that the question of prosecution for displaying a second or subsequent boards does not arise.

Housing

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has had to the consultation paper, "A New Financial Regime for Local Authority Housing in England and Wales."

Mr. Trippier: The official consultation period on this paper ended on 7 October although we made clear from the outset that we would receive comments after that date. By Christmas, 325 responses had been received in my Department and the Welsh Office. Of these, 129 respondents indicated that they would like their views to be made publicly available. I have today place a list of those responses in the Libraries of both Houses, through which copies may be obtained.

Rats

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the effect on the asset value of Thames Water of the cost of the treatment of rats within sewers, or otherwise within its works and lands, including all direct treatment, treatment by agencies and private contractors, for the financial years 1981-82 to 1987-88 inclusive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 10 January 1989]: None. It is unlikely to have any effect. Furthermore, the Department does not hold information on the amount spent on pest control by Thames Water.

British Waterways Board

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the names of the members of the British Waterways Board; if he will indicate which members of the board are living in Wales and which are appointed specifically to represent Welsh interests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The names of the British Waterways Board members are as follows:

Mr. David Ingman (Chairman)
Dr. Alan Robertson CBE (Vice Chairman)
Sir Peter Hutchison Bt
Dr. Brian Goodman
Mr. John Gordon
Mr. David Yorke.

None of the present members lives in Wales. Board members are not appointed to represent specific interests.

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will construct a table in the same form as figure F4 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government", showing for the first year with safety net and fully in place the relationship between gross and net poll tax to net household income for (a) single pensioner households, (b) other single person households, (c) two adult and (d) three adult households.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. Reliable information cannot be provided at the level of detail requested, because of the small numbers of some household types in the sample survey on which such estimates are based. The tables below show the information requested for each household type in the format of figure F4 in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714, but using the income ranges shown in figure F3. These estimates are based on data contained in the family expenditure survey and the illustrative community charge levels published on 23 June 1988.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has reached a conclusion on the recommendation of the Public Accounts Committee that a charge be considered for payments of vehicle excise duty refunds.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government have carefully considered the implications of imposing an administrative charge for refunds of vehicle excise duty, in the light of the recommendation of the Public Accounts Committee in its 50th report, 1985-86, "Vehicle Excise Duty Evasion and Enforcement". A number of factors have to be taken into account. The PAC rightly drew attention to the regular use of the refund facility by motor traders as part of their commercial activities. The facility is available for refunds in other circumstances and by private motorists. It could be argued that it would be unreasonable to demand payment for a refund of duty paid in advance for the use of a vehicle which is then not used for the full period of the licence. A study by the Department of the full financial implications of refunds has shown that the revenue gained by the Exchequer, because duty is not under present arrangements refunded for incomplete months, more than covers the costs of handling refund transactions. Separate handling charges are not at present made for the majority of vehicle licensing transactions, over and above the duty liable.

The Government's conclusion is that it is not necessary to introduce a charge in the context of the existing arrangements. The matter will be kept under review.

British Rail (Investment)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to authorise additional investment in British Rail's provincial sector to relieve overcrowding and to modernise the service.

Mr. Portillo: I have today authorised the purchase by British Rail of 138 Sprinter express vehicles at a cost of £54 million. The first of these vehicles should be entering service by early 1991. These vehicles will improve travelling conditions for passengers who travel on provincial express services and will allow more passengers to enjoy shorter journey times and in more comfort. They will be used to alleviate overcrowding on increasingly popular long distance services such as the north trans-Pennine and north-west to East Anglia. Passengers on other lines will also benefit. Extending the Sprinter express network will enable BR to re-deploy Sprinters to replace the 30-year-old vehicles still running on local Manchester and Birmingham services. As well as improving these services for passengers, they will run more cost-effectively, thereby also benefiting the ratepayer and taxpayer.

I understand that BR will be placing the order with BREL and the work is expected to be carried out at BREL's engineering works at Derby.

Flying Displays

Mr. Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he proposes for improving the safety of flying displays; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: A new article, 52A, is being added to the air navigation order to provide the CAA with wider powers to control air displays likely to attract substantial numbers of spectators.

The new article 52A requires the air display organiser to:

(a) obtain the permission in writing of the CAA;
(b) comply with any conditions attached to the permission; and
(c) permit participation by civil pilots only if they hold an appropriate CAA display authorisation.

The commander of a civil aircraft participating in a display under the provisions of article 52A must satisfy himself that:

(a) the organiser has CAA permission;
(b) his intended flight can comply with any conditions of the permission (and in the event shall comply with those conditions); and
(c) he has an appropriate display authorisation.

The Civil Aviation Authority is required:

(a) to ensure, before granting a permission, that the organiser is a suitable person and has competent organisation and staffing; and
(b) to satisfy itself that pilots granted a display authorisation, which will be valid for a period not exceeding two years, are fit persons by virtue of their knowledge, experience, competence, skill, physical and mental fitness to take part in displays.

These new provisions will not apply to Ministry of Defence establishments (including those used by the United States Air Force and other visiting forces). As in the past, the Ministry of Defeace controls air displays on its own property (whether the organisers are civilian or military) and is also responsible for the control of its military personnel (and those of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation forces stationed in the United Kingdom) taking part in civilian air shows. The rules under which such displays are conducted are at least as stringent as those now introduced by the Civil Aviation Authority. The Civil Aviation Authority will only allow other foreign military aircraft to take part in air displays to which article 52A applies after seeking advice from the Ministry of Defence as to the acceptability of the proposed display.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report all the schemes for road building or improvement in the area of Greater London that are included in the national trunk road programme and other assessment studies, respectively, providing for each scheme its estimated cost, brief description, approximate length and names of main consultants.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 10 January]: The information requested is as follows:

ENERGY

Departmental Scientists

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of (a) chief scientists and (b) chief scientific advisers in his Department had a previous career in nuclear technology.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Prior to 1983, the chief scientist was recruited from outside the Department. Since 1983, the chief scientist's role has been carried out by the head of my Department's energy technology division: additional advice is supplied by a part-time chief scientific adviser, who also chairs the advisory council on R&D for fuel and power. Of the nine chief scientists appointed since 1948, three had had a previous career in nuclear technology: neither of the two chief scientific advisers appointed since 1983 have had a career in this sector.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Statistics

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the incidence of crimes of robbery with violence during each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: The information for calendar years is published in table 2.1 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1987" Cm. 498, and for 12 months to the end of September 1988 in table 4 of Home Office statistical bulletin 36/88; copies of these publications are in the Library.

Identity Cards

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which countries of the European Community have a system of identity cards.

Mr. John Patten: The following countries of the European Community have a system of compulsory identity cards: Belgium, Greece, Luxembourg, Spain and West Germany. France, Italy and Portugal have a voluntary system.

Political Asylum

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of Sri Lankans living in the United Kingdom and awaiting a decision on their application for political asylum.

Mr. Renton: It is estimated that at the end of 1988 about 1,300 applications by Sri Lankans for asylum, made at the ports or following admission to the United Kingdom, were awaiting a decision. This figure is approximate. Establishing whether these applicants were all still in this country would incur disproportionate costs.

Estimates of the total number of asylum applications awaiting a decision (including those made outside of the United Kingdom), by nationality, are published annually in a Home Office statistical bulletin "Refugee Statistics United Kingdom" (tables 6 and 7 of issue No. 16/88). A more accurate estimate of the number of applications by Sri Lankans outstanding at the end of 1988 will be contained in the bulletin for 1988, due to be published in the summer of 1989.

Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women serving prison sentences on 30 November for the non-payment of fines.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 30 November 1988 about 530 male and 20 female fine defaulters were held in prison service establishments in England and Wales.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of people remanded in custody during the last 12 months subsequently received a prison sentence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest readily available information is published in table 2.6 of "Prison Statistics, England and Wales 1987" (Cm. 547).

Criminal Injuries

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of applications awaiting hearing at the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board on 1 December.

Mr. John Patten: The number of applications awaiting final decision was 82,075. The number of cases awaiting a hearing (the applicant not being content with the decision made by a single member of the board on consideration of the papers) was 7,026.

Strip Searches

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what records are kept when a women prisoner is strip-searched; and who may see such a record.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Records of each occasion on which an inmate is strip-searched are required to be kept only in respect of women prisoners in security category A. Such records are available for normal management purposes.

Football Matches (Arrests)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests were made at Football League matches during the first three months of the current football season; and if he will provide figures for each division of the Football League.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Provisional totals compiled by the Association of Chief Police Officers, from the start of the current season until 31 October 1988, are:

	Arrests
Division 1	672
Division 2	540
Division 3	287
Division 4	543
Total	2,042

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of vehicles that have been clamped in the Greater London area for each of the last four weeks.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of vehicles clamped in those parts of the Metropolitan police district where such operations are authorised by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport are as follows:

Dates	Number of vehicles clamped
21-27 November	2,342
28 November-4 December	2,870
5-11 December	2,870
12-18 December	2,846

Broadcasting

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will clarify the scope of his proposal to disqualify pirate radio broadcasters from holding radio authority licences.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: For the reasons given in my answer of 2 November 1988, column 652 to my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) we propose a provision making it a condition of all radio authority licences that the licensee neither has a conviction for any offence committed after 1 January 1989 under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 or the Marine Etc Broadcasting (Offences) Act 1967 connected with the operation or running of an unlicensed broadcasting station within five years of the date of an application for such a licence, nor employs such a person in the activities covered by the licence. In the light of representations we have received we do not envisage that such a condition would apply to offences committed before 1 January 1989.

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bodies have been found in each of the last five years for which records are available, in England, Wales, Scotland and Leicestershire, respectively; and how many of such bodies in each such year have not yet been identified.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The available information is as follows. In the last five years (ending 16 December 1988) 58 unidentified bodies were reported within the Metropolitan police district and are still unidentified. In the years 1983-87, 27 unidentified bodies were reported to the General Register Office for Scotland and are still unidentified. In Leicestershire, in about the last four years, three unidentified bodies of newly born infants were reported. Information for other police force areas could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fish Farms

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if workers employed on fish farms are covered by the terms of the Agricultural Wages Board Order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The orders made by the Agricultural Wages Board for England and Wales apply to those workers in agriculture as defined in the Agricultural Wages Act 1948, the interpretation of which is of course a matter for the courts. To date fish farming has not been considered to be an activity included within the definition.

Salmon Poaching

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports he has received from water authorities in England and Wales about the incidence of salmon poaching since the passing of the Salmon Act 1986: and when he now expects to invite the Salmon Advisory Committee to examine the effectiveness of the measures introduced in that Act.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Since 1 April 1987, the water authorities have mounted a total of 787 successful prosecutions for offences concerning salmon and trout. A further 353 cases are pending. In addition—and during the same period—the water authorities have brought 21 successful prosecutions for the new handling offence contained in section 32 of the Salmon Act 1986 and a further 78 cases are pending.

The Salmon Advisory Committee will be asked to review the effectiveness of the new handling offences and salmon dealer licensing in the light of the operation of these provisions. I intend that the dealer licensing schemes will be introduced as quickly as possible, but it will inevitably be some time before the committee can make a proper assessment of their effectiveness.

Next Steps

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he and any other Agriculture Ministers have considered agency status under the Next Steps proposal for the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce.

Mr. MacGregor: I am pleased to tell my hon. Friend that I and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales have decided that the board should be considered a candidate for agency status.

Coypu (Control)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the efforts of the Coypu Control Organisation and the Ministry's coypu research laboratory to eradicate the coypu.

Mr. MacGregor: I am pleased to report that my experts have declared the trapping programme caried out by the Coypu control Organisation a success. As a result, the campaign has been wound up, as from today. We had provided for trapping to continue until 1991 if necessary. That we have been able to bring the date forward is in no small way due to the dedicated efforts of the Coypu Control Organisation's team of trappers.

While a population of over 10,000 coypu has been eradicated no one can claim with certainty that the wild coypu is now extinct in Britain. Isolated animals may be at large and continued vigilance is needed. The public have already played a valuable part in the campaign, and any further sightings should be reported to the Ministry so that investigations can be put in hand at once.

Pigs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost of support per British pig since 1980 both in constant and current prices, identifying the proportion of that support met by public funds; and if he will estimate the proportion of that support directly translated into farm incomes.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The table shows the net public expenditure in the United Kingdom in the pigmeat sector and the size of the domestic pig population for each year since 1980. Pig producers did not receive any direct subsidies over this period support being confined to the provision of export refunds and payments for the short term private storage of pigmeat during times of market weakness.

Irish Meat

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce measures to require all Irish meat to be stamped with the word "Irish" in a pattern and size similar to the stamping of "Danish" on bacon from Denmark.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. All meat intended for human consumption must, on entry into the United Kingdom, bear a prescribed health mark confirming compliance with our health requirements. These marks show the country and plant of origin. The stamp on Danish bacon is applied by the trade for commercial purposes.

Salmonella

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the use of organic acids to reduce contamination by salmonella in poultry feed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 10 January 1989]: Research at Bristol university has demonstrated the effectiveness of organic acids in reducing salmonella contamination in poultry feedingstuffs. Although there are some drawbacks, including the additional cost involved, their use is being actively considered.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Incomes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when he next expects to conduct a survey of personal incomes; and at what point the results of that survey will become known;

(2) what survey of personal incomes have been carried out since 1985-86; and at what point the results of those surveys will become known.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Inland Revenue conducts the survey of personal incomes annually and the full range of data is normally available about 18 months after the end of the tax year to which the survey refers. Projections of the data are normally available after a further two or three months. The 1985-86 survey has been in use for some 15 months, both for Government purposes and to answer inquiries from the public; some tables compiled from it will be published shortly in "Inland Revenue Statistics 1988". Data and projections from the 1986-87 survey have recently begun to be used.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) working families with children and (b) childless people in work had incomes below the tax threshold at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Some 700,000 families (including both single people and married couples) where the head of the household is in full or part-time work have earnings below tax thresholds in 1988-89. Of these about 300,000 are families with children. These estimates are based on projections of the results of the 1986 family expenditure survey and are subject to revision.

EC Own Resources

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the European Commmunity's new own resources decision entered into force.

Mr. Brooke: Article 11(1) of the own resources decision provides for the ORD to come into force on the first day of the month following that in which the last member state notifies the Council secretariat that it has completed its national procedures for the adoption of the Decision. Not all member states had done so by 31 December and the ORD cannot therefore enter into force before 1 February.

The Commission has accordingly informed member states that there is no legal basis for payment in January of the new GNP-related fourth resource. However, the Commission has requested VAT-related payments in January on the basis of the 1989 draft budget.

The Government believe that, pending entry into force of the new ORD, own resources contributions should be based on the system of provisional twelfths. The United Kingdom has therefore restricted its VAT-related payment in January to the level which applied under the 1988 Budget. This is around £55 million less than the sum requested by the Commission.

Raw Materials

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to introduce a resource tax on specific and scarce raw materials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 January 1989]: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget Statement.

Natural Resources (Conservation and Reclamation)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to make the conservation and reclamation of scarce natural resources more fiscally and economically viable.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 January 1989]: On fiscal issues, I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget Statement. More general issues concerning the conservation and reclamation of scarce natural resources are variously matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Energy, for the Environment and for Trade and Industry.

Marginal Rate Taxpayers

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those groups of taxpayers with a marginal tax rate higher than 40 per cent. in addition to elderly people with incomes in the withdrawal band for age allowance.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 January 1989]: About 130,000 elderly basic rate taxpayers have incomes within the short band above the aged income limit where age allowance is withdrawn. These special rules are designed to concentrate the benefit of age allowance on elderly people with relatively modest incomes. They do not affect other taxpayers.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those tax allowances that are means-tested.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 January 1989]: Only the age allowance given to single people and married men aged 65 and over is related to income. Where income exceeds a certain limit (£10,600 for 1988-89) the allowance is withdrawn by £2 for every £3 of additional income until the level of the basic single person's or married man's allowance is reached.

Hard Corals

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what information he has of CITES-listed hard corals from the Philippines that have been seized since 1985 with the dates and grounds for seizures;

(2) if he will give details of the eight seizures of coral made since 29 August 1985.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 10 January 1989]: Eight seizures made by Customs since 1985 together comprise 15 black coral necklaces, two pieces of branch coral, four pieces of brain coral, 94 pieces of which the type is not recorded centrally and two seizures of an unspecified amount and type.

Three further seizures have been recorded since I wrote to the hon. Member in July 1988. These comprise four black coral necklaces, a pair of black coral earrings and two pieces of which the type is not recorded.

The country of origin of such goods is not always ascertainable or reported; in none of the 11 cases referred to above is the origin known to be the Philippines. All seizures were made under the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979, the goods having been imported in contravention of Council Regulation (EEC) No 3626/82, as amended by Commission Regulation (EEC) 2384/85.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints were received by his Department about a low-flying aircraft in the Inverness area in the early evening of 26 May 1987; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of the investigation into this incident.

Mr. Neubert: Seven complaints were received from members of the public concerning a low-flying military aircraft in the Inverness area on 26 May 1987. The aircraft concerned was identified as a United States Air Force F-111 aircraft from RAF Lakenheath on a properly briefed and authorised overflight of Dalcross airport to the north-east of Inverness. An investigation by the RAF police concluded that there was no evidence of any breach of flying regulations.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Seismography

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he will take to encourage international co-operation in the study of worldwide seismography.

Mr. Jackson: The United Kingdom participates extensively in international seismology, and hosts the International Seismological Centre. The Natural Environment Research Council is particularly involved through its British Geological Survey, which is one of the world's leading earthquake monitoring organisations. The NERC's collaborations include renewing a five year agreement to exchange seismologists and equipment with the Institute of the Physics of the Earth in Moscow; plans to sponsor a small group of earthquake engineers from Imperial college to work in Armenia; and an anticipated invitation to lead an earthquake prediction programme later this year with the European Community and the People's Republic of China. The NERC also sponsors United Kingdom university researchers in fundamental seismology, with substantial international connections. These varied efforts represent a significant level of encouragement for international co-operation in this field.

Staff-Pupil Ratios

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing staff-to-pupil ratios in each local education authority area in England for each category of school.

Mr. Butcher: The pupil-teacher ratio in each category of maintained school in each local education authority in England in January 1988 is given in the following table.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Disabled Persons Register

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a register for disabled was last compiled in Northern Ireland; and if he will seek to produce an up-to-date register.

Mr Viggers: The Department of Economic Development maintains a register of disabled people who are capable of employment but handicapped in obtaining it. The register is continuously updated.

Ards Peninsula (Medical Coverage)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated population in the Ards peninsula south of the line between Kircubbin and Portavogie; how many medical doctors have their practices based within this area; what arrangements are made at weekends in this area for a doctor on call service; and whether the size of population meets the criteria for the provision of a additional doctor in this area.

Mr. Needham: The estimated population of the area based on the Northern Ireland 1981 census is approximately 6,000. Five doctors, two in separate practices in Portaferry and three in one practice in Kircubbin, are based in this area and provide medical services to a total of 10,205 patients. At weekends the doctors in Portaferry share an on-call arrangement with the doctors in Kircubbin. The need for an additional doctor in the area would be a matter for consideration by the Eastern Health and Social Servies Board, having regard to the advice of the statutory medical committee of the Central Services Agency. I understand that the criteria taken into account by the medical committee include not only the population of the area but also the average list size of each doctor and the distribution of practices in the area.

Fair Employment Agency

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report the reports published by the Fair Employment Agency, showing for each case the date the investigation began and the date of the publication of the report.

[1] Estimate.

James O'Hara

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to whether James O'Hara, of Lisburn, Northern Ireland, convicted at Dublin in June 1974, was employed by the British Army to kidnap individuals in the Republic of Ireland; what inquiries have been carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The matter has been fully investigated by the appropriate authorities and no evidence was found to support this allegation.

Mr. Fred Holroyd (Photographic Material)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date the Royal Ulster Constabulary contacted Mr. Fred Holroyd concerning the return of photographic material referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East of 23 May, Official Report, column 36.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 10 January 1989): I understand that the RUC communicated with Mr. Holroyd in August 1985.

Lower Crescent, Comber (Contract)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many dwellings the Northern Ireland Housing Executive recently completed in the contract at Lower crescent, Comber; on what date and in which newspapers invitations to contractors for this scheme were advertised; how many applications were received; how many firms were then invited to submit a tender; how many tenders were received; and whether the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 10 January 1989]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the chief executive has advised me that a total of 22 dwellings were completed; advertisements in relation to 19 dwellings were placed in the Belfast Telegraph, News Letter, and Irish News on 16 April 1985, in the County Down Spectator and Newtownards Chronicle on 18 April 1985 and in the Down Recorder on 19 April 1985; 14 applications were received; 10 firms were invited to tender; eight tenders were received and the contract was awarded to the second lowest tenderer. A further three dwellings were added to the contract in negotiation with the successful tenderer.

HEALTH

Water (Aluminium Sulphate)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are currently issued by his Department regarding the toxicity and potential effects on health of aluminium sulphate in drinking water.

Mr. Freeman: No guidelines on aluminium sulphate in drinking water are issued by this Department. However, EC directive 80/778/EEC sets maximum admissible concentrations of 0·2 milligrams of aluminium and 250 milligrams of sulphate per litre of drinking water, and stipulates the conditions under which these concentrations may be exceeded without breach of the directive. Responsibility for the application of the directive lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

The World Health Organisation has set guidelines for aluminium and sulphate in drinking water of 0·2 milligrams per litre and 400 milligrams per litre respectively. Aluminium and its salts are of low toxicity and these values are not based on health effects but on risks of discolouration from aluminium and unpalatability from sulphate at higher concentrations.

Resources

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish expenditure on (a) National Health Service hospital services in England and (b) family planning clinic services in England in cash terms and real terms for each year since 1980, and also expressing both as an index based upon 1980.

Mr. Mellor: Following is information derived from the annual accounts and financial returns of health authorities in England:

Year	(a) Hospital services—Total revenue expenditure				(b) Community Health Services revenue expenditure—Family planning
	£000 (cash)	Index	£000 (at 1987-88 prices)	Index	£000 (cash)	Index	£000 (at 1987-88 prices)	Index

(b) "Health Services Costing Returns"—1980-81 to 1986-87 (latest available)—DHSS/Welsh Office.

Notes to the table

1. Capital expenditure is excluded.
2. The figures for the earlier years have been expressed at 1987-88 prices by the use of the gross domestic product deflator.
3. The figures for "hospital services" are exclusively for those services. That is expenditure on community health, ambulance, blood transfusion and other services (usually included in total Hospital and Community Health Services expenditure) is excluded.
4. The figures for "community health services—family planning" are derived from community health service costing returns submitted by district health authorities in England and reflect expenditure which is primarily clinic based. Expenditure on family planning services and related activity undertaken in hospitals and by general medical practitioners as part of family practitioner services is excluded.

Salmonella (Eggs)

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many farms were involved in outbreaks of salmonella attributed by him to eggs; and in what parts of the country they are located.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 19 December 1988]: At the request of medical colleagues in 1988, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food investigated 22 farms which were suspected as a possible source of eggs involved in 17 outbreaks of salmonella food poisoning. In some of these outbreaks more than one farm could have been the source of the eggs. On only seven farms was the same salmonella serotype to that involved in the food poisoning outbreaks isolated. The seven farms concerned are located in Kent, Sussex, Dorset, Hertfordshire, Yorkshire and Humberside.

Doctors' Pay

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the real terms increase in doctors' remuneration since 1979.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 14 December 1988 c. 606.]: I regret that my previous reply contained an error. The reply should have read "25·5 per cent. between 1979-80 and 1987-88".

SOCIAL SECURITY

Cold Weather Payments

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants were paid under last winter's supplementary benefit exceptionally cold weather scheme; how much benefit was paid; and how many claims were refused.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have arranged for the information to be placed in the Library.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the administration costs of the independent living fund are being borne by his Department.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 19 December 1988]: It is estimated that in the first year of operation the Department will have met about 64 per cent. of the fund's administration costs.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Tobacco

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the value of exports of tobacco products from the United Kingdom in each of the last six years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is given in the table:

United Kingdom exports of tobacco products 1982-87
value in £ million

Year	Exports (FOB)
1982	383·0
1983	426·9
1984	409·2
1985	456·3
1986	393·7
1987	433·5

Note: Figures for 1987 are provisional.

Bees and Bee Products

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the balance of trade in bees and bee products for each of the years since 1979 in standard prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Trade in bees is not separately identified in the Overseas Trade Statistics. The only bee product that is separately identified is honey; figures which are only available at current prices are given in the table.

Balance of trade in honey 1979-88
value in £ million

American Airlines (Investment)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the restrictions on United Kingdom investors purchasing shares in American airlines.

Mr. Alan Clark: United Kingdom investors are permitted to purchase shares in American airlines. However, the United States Federal Aviation Act (1958) requires that an "air carrier" be "a citizen of the United States". In order to satisfy this requirement, it is a condition that no more than 25 per cent. of the voting interest of a United States air carrier is owned or controlled by persons who are not United States citizens.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Armenia

72. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Soviet authorities concerning assistance for the earthquake victims of Armenia.

73. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts the Government have made to aid earthquake victims in Armenia.

Mr. Chris Patten: On 9 December I announced emergency aid of £5 million in response to the Armenian earthquake. So far this has been used, in collaboration with the British Red Cross, to finance 12 relief flights carrying tents, clothing, medical supplies, emergency food rations, heavy earth-moving equipment and other relief supplies. We have also financed a team of firemen and a team of medical experts as well as providing £113,500 to CARE Britain for food parcels. All this assistance has been made in response to specific requests from the Soviet authorities, which have expressed their gratitude for all the help provided from Britain.

The search and rescue phase of the relief operation is now over and the balance of our £5 million will be used for rehabilitation and reconstruction activities which are now under consideration by the Soviet authorities.

Bangladesh

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much bilateral aid was given to Bangladesh in 1988; and how it was spent.

Mr. Eggar: Expenditure in 1987—the latest year for which figures are available—was £34·8 million. In the current financial year total expenditure is expected to be about £50 million. We are providing project aid, commodity aid, food aid and technical co-operation as well as substantial emergency relief and rehabilitation assistance following the recent floods and cyclone. The main sectors to which our aid is directed are energy, communications, natural resources and health.

SCOTLAND

NHS Grading

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff from each of the old grades have been assimilated to each of the new grades in the recent clinical grading structure in the Ayrshire and Arran health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the table.

Health Service (Grading)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the additional cost of the regrading of nurses and midwives for Lothian health board; and what proportion of that additional cost is to be met by the board from its own resources in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 January 1989]: Lothian health board has been given an additional £14·936 million over and above its initial allocation for 1988-89 to allow it to meet the cost of the pay awards to nurses and other staff covered by the review bodies. Allocations to health boards for 1989-90 have not yet been made.

Health Boards

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board (a) its budget for 1987-88, (b) the number of staff employed and (c) the population covered.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is contained in "Scottish Health Statistics 1988", compiled by the information and statistics division of the Common Services Agency for the Scottish Health Service, which was published on 19 December 1988. Copies are available in the Library.

Piper Alpha

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the measures taken to monitor the area surrounding the remains of the Piper Alpha platform for pollution; how long these measures will continue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Immediately following the incident on 6 July, aerial surveys to detect oil spillage were carried out by the Department of Transport marine pollution control unit. Although some spillage occurred, the total quantity was quite small—about 500 tonnes—and dispersed quickly with no major environmental impact.

The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, in co-operation with the operators, Occidental Petroleum (Caledonian) Ltd., has been monitoring debris and other samples from the vicinity of the Piper Alpha site for other potential sources of contamination. A quantity of polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) and small amounts of radioactive isotopes were known to have been on the Piper Alpha platform before the incident. Efforts to locate these substances, or their original containers, have been inhibited by debris and the damaged state of the platform remains.

Small traces of PCB contamination have been found in debris and sediment samples. Further samples are being taken at present to enable the extent of any release of PCBs to be assessed. So far no traces of radioactive contamination have been detected.

As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Energy, explained on 8 December, in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden), the conditions attached to the approval of the abandonment programme for Piper Alpha include requirements for further surveys and monitoring of the site and for sediment sampling and examination, to be repeated at such times as the Secretary of State may subsequently direct. They also provide for any leakage of oil or gas to be sealed to his satisfaction and for steps to be taken to deal with any unacceptable levels of pollution.

Fish Farms

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow may expect an answer to his letter dated 5 November 1988 to the Minister of State at his Department on the subject of predator control on marine fish farms.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My noble Friend the Minister of State has written to the hon. Member today.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if workers employed on fish farms are covered by the terms of the Agricultural Wages Board Order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The orders made by the Scottish agricultural wages board relate to workers employed in agriculture as defined in section 17 of the Agricultural Wages (Scotland) Act 1949, the interpretation of which is a matter for the courts. To date fish farming has not been considered to be an activity included within the definition.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make available to the public the results of research into the presence of residues of Nuvan 500 EC in salmon flesh; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when and where the results of research into the environmental and health effects of the use on marine fish farms of Nuvan 500 EC will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 28 November 1988.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether (a) all products known as pesticides and (b) Nuvan 500 EC should comply with the Control of Pesticides Regulations for the supply to, and storage and handling on, marine fish farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 cover pesticides as defined in regulation 3 including Nuvan 500 EC as approved for use in poultryhouses. The regulations apply to sale, supply, storage, use and advertisement in Scotland as well as England and Wales.

Any product or substance that is added to the water or given orally or otherwise for the treatment, control or prevention of ectoparasites on farmed fish however, is defined as an animal medicine and is subject to controls under the Medicines Act 1968.

EMPLOYMENT

Identity Cards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department has investigated, or is currently studying, the usefulness of a national identity card to his departmental responsibilities; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on Thursday 15 December (Official Report, columns 1080-82).

Claimants

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, during the first three quarters of 1988, how many claimants have been referred to the employment service jobclub at Balham jobcentre; and of those how many (a) found work, (b) entered training, (c) entered EAS and (d) entered the community programme.

Mr. Lee: During the first three-quarters of 1988, 391 people were referred to Balham jobcentre jobclub. It is not possible to say how many of these were claiming benefits. Of those referred, 106 actually joined the jobclub with the following outcomes:

(a) 38 found work
(b) 12 entered training
(c) one entered EAS
(d) three entered the community programme.

Balham job club serves an inner city area where many unemployed people have difficulty in finding work. Nevertheless over half its members achieve a positive outcome.

Bridging Allowance

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by region, how many 16 and 17-year-olds were in receipt of bridging allowance at 23 and 30 September, 7, 14, 21 and 28 October and 4, 11, 18 and 25 November.

Mr. Cope: Full statistical information for YTS bridging allowance recipients is available on a monthly basis. The figures relate to those being paid by computer and clerically by UBOs.

The dates for which figures are available are:

13 October 1988
10 November 1988
8 December 1988.

On those dates the number of 16 and 17-year-olds receiving YTS bridging allowance, by region, were as follows:

	13 October 1988	10 November 1988	8 December 1988
East Midlands and Eastern	2,986	1,354	1,164
West Midlands	4,093	1,371	1,074

Northern	2,729	1,028	742
Yorks and Humberside	4,658	1,836	1,392
Scotland	7,374	2,158	1,793
North West	6,432	2,183	2,015
Totals	36,688	13,158	10,784

Mechanical Excavators

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made towards the harmonisation of vehicle controls on mechanical excavators in use within the European Community in the interests of operator safety.

Mr. Cope: Between now and 1992 European standards will be prepared to support the harmonisation of safety requirements for all machinery including excavators. No decision has been made within the European Community as to the inclusion of vehicle controls.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the level of employment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: Between March 1983 and June 1988 the work force in employment in the United Kingdom increased by 2,178,000 to 25,739,000 the highest level on record. This rising trend has now continued for more than five years. The figures have been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

Tourism

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many section 4 schemes have been funded for tourist-related projects in Nottingham since 1985; how much investment has been generated in each from how much grant in each; and how many jobs, both full-time and part-time, have been created and at what cost per head in each case.

Mr. Lee: Six schemes have been offered assistance under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 in Nottingham since 1985. Total investment is as follows:

Project	Assistance offered £	Total eligible project cost £	Additional jobs expected by the applicant (full-time equivalent)	Assistance per job £
Waltons Hotel	18,173	98,173	2·0	9,087
TIC Nottingham	13,961	69,807	1·0	13,961
Talbot House Hotel	9,000	45,500	1·5	6,000
Bridgford Lodge Hotel	42,000	344,000	12·5	3,360
Tales of Robin Hood	155,000	950,000	21·0	7,381
Pageant of Robin Hood	150,000	1,358,212	29·0	5,172

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who, other than his Department's civil servants and PA Management Consultants, are involved in the tourism policy review.

Mr. Lee: The review team consists of civil servants and PA management consultants. They have talked to nearly 150 individuals and organisations in the tourism industry and received submissions. Their report and its recommendations will be considered by Ministers before any decisions are taken.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the tourism review will include analysis of the rôle of all Government Departments involved.

Mr. Lee: Yes.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of foreign tourists and British visitors to London in 1986-87 and 1987-88 and the value of tourism to London in those years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The following table gives the latest available information:

Tourist visits and expenditure in London

	Numbers of visits (000s)[1]		Expenditure (£ millions)
	1986	1987	1986	1987
Overseas residents	8,190	9,260	3,203	3,561
British residents	13,000	15,000	670	755
Total	21,190	24,260	3,873	4,316

[1]Visits of one or more nights only.
Sources: International Passenger Survey and British Tourism Survey Monthly.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of jobs dependent on tourism in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available in the form requested, but it is estimated that in September 1988 the number of employees in employment in the hotel and catering industry in London was 173,000.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of journeys made by foreign tourists and British visitors to London on (a) the underground, (b) the buses, (c) the trains and (d) other modes of transport and the total value of the journeys made in 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available. However, the London tourist board carries out a survey of a small sample of overseas visitors to London every summer. This survey gave the following information:

Percentage of all overseas visitors who used transport at least once during stay in London in:

per cent.

Mode of Transport	Summer 1987	Summer 1988
Underground	90	92
Buses (LRT)	70	71
British Rail Train	25	18

The estimates from this survey were based on a very small and non-random sample and are, therefore, subject to considerable sampling error.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the value of tourism to the hotel and catering industry in London in 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available in the form requested, but it is estimated that overseas and domestic visitors staying in London for one night or more spent a total of £3·9 billion in 1986 and a total of £4·3 billion in 1987.

Employment Training

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to reduce (a) the number of managing agents for youth training schemes and (b) the number of youth training schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Training Agency's area offices negotiate contracts with managing agents to provide sufficient YTS places to meet the needs in each locality. As the number of young people eligible for YTS falls over the next few years, the overall number of schemes and of managing agents may well need to be adjusted. Any such adjustments will be made locally, to match local requirements.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the decision of some local authorities to boycott employment training.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Employment training has made a very successful start with more than 100,000 people already in training, in many cases with the help of local authorities. About 170 local authorities are already acting as training managers and 50 acting as training agents for the scheme.

I very much regret that certain Labour controlled local authorities have decided actively to oppose and boycott employment training. This deplorable stance serves only to distance those local authorities from the needs of the unemployed people in their communities. A recent High Court decision made it clear that Liverpool city council had been using its discretionary powers unlawfully to penalise organisations taking part in employment training. I trust that other authorities will take careful note of that judgment in framing their policies for the future.

Energy Grants

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many energy grants have been paid in each month since April.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer, 22 December 1988]: The information requested is provided in the following table:

1988	£
April	16,828
May	16,463
June	7,049
July	9,389
August	9,475
September	24,562
October	17,202
November	8,867
Total	109,835

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

NATO (Fortieth Anniversary)

12. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the Government intend to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the foundation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

21. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the Government intend to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the foundation of NATO.

Mr. Waldegrave: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces gave a list of a number of events in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Mr. Watts) yesterday. In addition to these, the next ministerial meeting of the North Atlantic Council is scheduled to take place in London on 8-9 June 1989.

Vietnamese Refugees (Hong Kong)

15. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Vietnamese Government regarding the repatriation of boat people arriving in Hong Kong.

47. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Vietnam in connection with the Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I discussed the problem of Vietnamese boat people in Hong Kong with the Vietnamese Foreign Minister on 7 June 1988 and with his Deputy on 30 September. Her Majesty's embassy in Hanoi is in regular touch with the Vietnamese authorities.

36. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with the Governor of Hong Kong on the plight of the Vietnamese refugees.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We are in close and frequent contact with the Government of Hong Kong on all aspects of the problems of Vietnamese boat people in Hong Kong.

Malta

16. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his contacts with the Government of Malta over the past three years.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and I have frequent contacts with the Maltese Government, the most recent ones being in September last year, when their Prime Minister visited London for three days. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State will be seeing the Maltese Prime Minister again on 13 January.

Kurds (Representations)

17. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Iraq concerning the plight of Kurdish people.

Mr. Waldegrave: As I told the hon. Member in a written reply on 25 November, at column 142, we have repeatedly expressed our concern at the treatment of the Kurdish community in Iraq. I also refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State's comments to the House on 30 November at column 689. I raised the question of alleged use of chemical weapons against Kurds in my speech on 9 January to the Paris conference on chemical weapons.

Mr. Charles Powell

18. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects Mr. Charles Powell to return to the Foreign Office.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: In due course.

Yasser Arafat (UN Speech)

19. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet the Israeli Foreign Minister to discuss the implications of the speech of Mr. Yasser Arafat to the United Nations General Assembly.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to have an early meeting with Mr. Arens, but no date has yet been set.

Iran (Political Prisoners)

20. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to (a) the Government of Iran and (b) relevant international bodies about the killings of political prisoners in Iran.

37. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Iran regarding executions of political prisoners there.

Mr. Waldegrave: The reports of executions are a matter of grave concern. We have consistently condemned such violations of human rights in Iran. We co-sponsored the resolution on human rights in Iran which was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on 8 December.

USSR (International Relations)

22. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has been able to make an assessment of the main foreign policy points in Mr. Gorbachev's 6 December speech to the United Nations in regard to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republic's relations with the United Kingdom and other Western countries.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. We have welcomed Mr. Gorbachev's speech as the clearest exposition so far a less ideological Soviet approach to foreign policy. This approach, if maintained, should help to improve further east-west relations and on our bilateral relations with the Russians, and lead to increasing practical progress in arms control, human rights and the settlement of regional conflicts.

United States Secretary of State

23. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the United States Secretary of State; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State last met Mr. Shultz at the meeting of the North Atlantic Council in Brussels on 8 and 9 December. They discussed a wide range of issues.

European Community-Gulf Co-operation Council

24. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the state of relations between the European Community and the Gulf Co-operation Council.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Community's relations with the Gulf Co-operation Council are excellent. A first stage economic co-operation agreement and a political joint declaration were signed last June. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State returned today from a most successful trip to four Gulf Co-operation Council countries—Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and Oman.

USSR (Military Reductions)

25. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has discussed President Gorbachev's proposed conventional arms reductions with the Foreign Ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Waldegrave: I discussed the matter with my NATO colleagues at the North Atlantic Council ministerial meeting in Brussels on 8 December. I draw my hon. Friend's attention to our statement on conventional arms control in which we welcomed the proposed reductions as a "positive contribution" to redressing the heavy conventional imbalance in Europe. We also called for cuts in the number of tanks to half than present levels, going well beyond the reduction announced by Mr. Gorbachev; and for limits on the tank holdings of individual countries much lower than those of the Soviet Union, even after the proposed cuts. The full text can be found in the copy of the statement placed in the Library of the House.

Falkland Islands (Housebuilding)

26. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of housebuilding on the Falkland Islands since 1982.

Mr. Eggar: Since 1982, 136 housing units have been built and 42 mobile homes installed in the Falkland Islands. A further 84 units are at various stages of construction or planning, including 36 for Falkland Islands Government, which should be finished by the end of April.

We and the Falkland Islands Government recognise the crucial importance of housing. A senior British consultant visited the Falklands in November to help prepare a new comprehensive housing policy. We are also encouraged that in recent months a number of building plots have been purchased by individual islanders for private housing development.

Afghanistan

27. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the current situation in Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: The Afghan people continue to resist Soviet military occupation and the unrepresentative PDPA regime. We look forward to the withdrawal of all Soviet troops by 15 February in accordance with the Geneva agreements, and to the restoration of Afghan independence and self-determination.

President Gorbachev (UK Visit)

28. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects that President Gorbachev will next visit the United Kingdom.

56. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects that President Gorbachev will next visit the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: Mr. Gorbachev's planned visit to the United Kingdom last month had to be postponed due to the tragic earthquake in Armenia. We hope that it will be possible to agree new dates for the visit in the near future.

Hungary

29. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Hungary.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary has no firm plans to visit Hungary.

Taiwan

30. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet representatives of the Taiwan Government.

Mr. Eggar: Since 1950, successive British Governments have dealt with the Government of the People's Republic of China as the sole legal Government of China. Accordingly there can be no question of my right hon. and learned Friend meeting representatives of the authorities in Taiwan.

South African Ambassador

31. Mr. Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the ambassador of South Africa; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the South African ambassador on 23 September. They discussed a wide range of issues of common interest.

Middle East

32. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit the middle east to discuss the peace process.

Mr. William Waldegrave: The Arab/Israel dispute was among the subjects my right hon. and learned Friend discussed during his visit to the middle east earlier this month.

Spain and Portugal (EC Accession)

33. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Spanish and Portuguese Foreign Ministers to discuss the entry of those countries to the Western European Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave him on 30 November 1988 at column 306.

South West Africa

34. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress which has been made towards a South African withdrawal from South West Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We greatly welcome the signature of an agreement in New York on 22 December paving the way for Namibian independence. We congratulate the United States Government on their skilful mediation and all the signatories for the statesmanship which they have shown.

British Citizens (Overseas Travel)

35. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he is planning to seek to reduce hooliganism on the part of British citizens travelling abroad during the 1989 tourist season.

Mr. Eggar: We shall continue our public education campaign in the United Kingdom and abroad to reduce the level of hooliganism and rowdy behaviour by British citizens. Further TV and radio public information messages are planned for this year. We shall also continue to co-operate closely with the Association of British Travel Agents and tour operators, and with the central and local authorities of the main tourist countries. Together with the Home Office we are actively pursuing Spanish proposals to post a small number of British police to Spanish resort areas during the coming tourist season, for liaison purposes.

British Embassies (Export Activities)

38. Mr. Ground: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on recent efforts to improve the export promotion activities of British embassies.

Mrs. Chalker: Our efforts to improve the export promotion activities of British posts abroad is a continuous process, to which we attach great importance. Such activities are scrutinised regularly by the overseas inspectorate system in the light of agreed commercial objectives which are revised annually.

United States

39. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will next visit the United States; and what issues he plans to discuss with President Bush's Administration.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State hopes to visit the United States as soon as possible after the inauguration of the new President, when he will discuss a wide range of issues of mutual interest with the new Secretary of State and others.

El Salvador

40. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the human rights situation in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: We condemn all abuses of human rights. We remain concerned by reports of an increase in human rights violations on both sides of the conflict in El Salvador and we shall continue to raise our concerns with the Salvadorean Government whenever appropriate.

Tibet

41. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of China on the subject of Tibet.

Mr. Eggar: The subject of Tibet was raised by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State with the then Chinese Foreign Minister, Wu Xueqian when he visited the United Kingdom in March 1988.

President Vassiliou of Cyprus

42. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the leader of the Greek Cypriot regime; and what was discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend last met President Vassiliou of Cyprus on 4 October, when he called on my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to review progress in the intercommunal talks on the Cyprus problem.

Nigeria

43. Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on political and economic relations with Nigeria.

Mrs. Chalker: We enjoy close and cordial political and economic relations with Nigeria.

Human Rights Convention (USSR)

44. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the human rights convention proposed by the Soviet Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have agreed in principle that the third stage of the CSCE conference on the human dimension should be held in Moscow, but our attendance depends upon the Soviet Union making further specific major human rights improvements between now and 1991.

Kampuchea

45. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for Her Majesty's Government's policy of recent developments in Kampuchea.

71. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the threat to peace and security in Kampuchea; and what initiatives he expects to take in either the Security Council of the United Nations or in any of its specialised agencies.

Mr. Eggar: We wish to see Cambodia restored to its place as a free and neutral country. We support the work of those directly concerned to achieve this aim. Vietnam's illegal occupation remains a major obstacle. There have been a number of encouraging developments recently, both internal and external. More progress is needed before the United Nations Security Council can play a formal role. Some specialised United Nations agencies (for example UNBRO, WFP, UNICEF) are already doing useful work.

54. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed the situation in Kampuchea with representatives of the Governments of (a) China, (b) the United States and (c) Thailand.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State discussed Cambodia with his American and Chinese counterparts in the margins of the United Nations General Assembly in September 1988, and with the Thai Foreign Minister in August 1987. The Prime Minister discussed this subject with the Thai Prime Minister in August 1988 and my noble Friend, the Minister of State will raise it when he visits Bangkok later this month.

Israel (Occupied Territories)

46. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to impose any pressure or sanctions on the Israeli Government for their failure to abide by the Geneva convention in the occupied territories.

Mr. Waldegrave: We shall continue to urge the Israelis to administer the occupied territories in accordance with international law and accepted standards of human rights. We do not believe that economic sanctions would help improve conditions in the occupied territories.

Soviet Foreign Minister

48. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will next meet the Soviet Foreign Minister; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend has no firm plans to meet Mr. Shevardnadze at present. He will, no doubt, accompany Mr. Gorbachev to the United Kingdom when the Soviet President's visit is reinstated.

South Korea

49. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts his Department is making to promote commercial relations with South Korea.

Mr. Eggar: Commercial relations with the Republic of Korea are good, although we are obliged to make regular representations to the Korean authorities about access to their market. The British embassy in Seoul stands ready to help both existing exporters and those companies which are new to the Korean market. They are expecting 13 sponsored trade missions in 1989, matching the 13 which visited in 1988. British exports to Korea increased by 48 per cent. in 1987 over 1986. The first nine months of 1988 saw a further 10 per cent. increase.

Bophuthatswana

50. Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will now recognise Bophuthatswana as an independent country.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

Bangladesh

51. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last visited Bangladesh.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has not visited Bangladesh, but my noble Friend Lord Glenarthur did so in December 1988.

Western European Union

52. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the results to date of the British presidency of the Western European Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence hosted a ministerial council meeting of the WEU in London on 14 November. The major event of that occasion was signature of a protocol for the accession of Portugal and Spain to the modified Brussels treaty 1954. These two countries will become full members of WEU once ratification procedures are complete. A satisfactory outcome to the enlargement negotiations with Portugal and Spain was one of the main priorities for our Presidency, and its early attainment is most satisfactory.

A further priority was to develop the WEU as a forum for co-ordinating European approaches to out of area issues. The ministerial council noted with approval the success of the joint naval activities in the Gulf, particularly the mine-sweeping operation Cleansweep, as a concrete example of the work being done by WEU in defence co-operation.

Our other main priorities—to elaborate on the commitments in the Hague platform on European security interests, and to use WEU as a forum for frank discussion of key European security issues—have also been pursued energetically. The ministerial council considered a report on implementation of the platform and endorsed further work on its elaboration, which will continue over the next six months. Ministers also took note of a report on progress made in fulfilling the mandate on arms control and defence requirements given by WEU Ministers at their meeting in the Hague in April 1988.

Chile

53. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the role of Her Majesty's Government following the plebiscite in Chile.

Mr. Eggar: We have received no formal representations following the plebiscite in Chile, though we continue our dialogue with Chilean political leaders. We also continue to receive expressions of the diverse views of members of the British public.

59. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with Governments of other European countries about ways of encouraging the transition to full democracy in Chile.

Mr. Eggar: We have frequent discussions with our European partners on Chile. The position of the Twelve was set out in their statements of 7 October and 1 November, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Fiji

55. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to pay an official visit to Fiji.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to visit Fiji at present.

President Gorbachev (United Nations Speech)

57. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet his United States counterpart to discuss the West's response to Mr. Gorbachev's United Nations speech of 8 December.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State hopes to visit the United States as soon as possible after the inauguration of the new President and Administration. He plans to discuss a wide range of issues of mutual interest with his new opposite number and others, including the prospects for east-west relations.

European Community (Foreign Policies)

58. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any proposals further to integrate the foreign policies of the European Economic Community member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We play a very full part in the European political co-operation, and will continue to do so, on the basis of the provisions of title III of the Single European Act. We have no proposals at present for extending either the existing arrangements for co-operation or the wide range of foreign policy issues on which co-operation takes place. We find such co-operation extremely useful.

Commonwealth Co-operation

60. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's current policy towards the development of Commonwealth co-operation.

Mrs. Chalker: We continue to support the development of Commonwealth co-operation and to play our full part in its financing. We already make annual contributions to the Commonwealth fund for technical co-operation, the Commonwealth youth programme, the Commonwealth foundation and the Commonwealth secretariat of 30 per cent. of their budgets, and to the Commonwealth Science Council. In addition, Britain is assisting the Commonwealth of Learning, a new Commonwealth distance education network, by financing the development of the documentation centre and a credit transfer register at the British Open university. The cost will be between £1 million and £2 million over a period of five years. We also provide a substantial grant-in-aid (£2·65 million in 1988-89) to the Commonwealth Institute.

Palestine Liberation Organisation

61. Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the meeting of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) with the chief spokesman for the Palestine Liberation Organisation, Mr. Bassam Abu Sherif.

63. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the meeting of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) with the chief spokesman for the Palestine Liberation Organisation, Mr. Bassam Abu Sherif.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) on 12 December at column 398.

Caribbean

62. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit the Caribbean.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to pay an official visit to the Caribbean, but my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development is currently visiting the area and I shall be visiting later this month.

Cyprus

64. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the discussions taking place in New York and Cyprus between President Vassiliou and Mr. Denktash on the reunification of Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has reviewed the outcome of the New York discussions with President Vassiliou, as have officials with Mr. Denktash and the United Nations Secretary-General. Some progress was achieved in the first round of the intercommunal talks and we have encouraged President Vassiliou to respond to the positive elements in the ideas which Mr. Denktash put forward in November.

68. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning the state of the present negotiations taking place under United Nations auspices, about the future of Cyprus.

Mrs. Chalker: Following their meeting with the United Nations Secretary-General in New York on the 22 and 23 November, President Vassiliou of Cyprus and Mr. Denktash, leader of the Turkish Cypriot community, have begun a second round of talks in Nicosia. These are still continuing. We believe that, with good will on both sides, there is a real opportunity for the achievement of the comprehensive Cyprus settlement which we all want to see.

Human Rights Conference

65. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received further details on the proposed conditions for a human rights conference to be held in Moscow.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Soviet Union has given assurances that conditions of access to the openness of the third stage of the CSCE conference on the human dimension, assuming this is held in Moscow, will be no less than for similar meetings in the west.

Iran

66. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the restoration of normal diplomatic relations with Iran.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State agreed with the Iranian Foreign Minister on 30 September in New York that full diplomatic representation would be restored in Tehran and London. Final agreement on the details was reached on 10 November. Her Majesty's embassy in Tehran has now re-opened under our own flag. Relations between the two countries will be conducted in accordance with the Vienna conventions on diplomatic and consular relations, to which both countries are signatories. The chargé d'affaires, Mr. Gordon Pirie, has had meetings with Iranian officials and gained consular access to the two British prisoners in Iran one of whom has now been released. This is a first step in developing a more constructive and businesslike relationship with Iran. We will consider the exchange of ambassadors in due course.

Islamabad (UK Post)

67. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to improve the administration of the United Kingdom post in Islamabad.

Mr. Eggar: Following a recent inspection in Islamabad it has been agreed that the permanent establishment of entry clearance officers be increased from 26 to 28, and that all new appointees from the diplomatic service will have a month's overlap with their predecessors. Four further ECO's are being provided for nine months from January 1989 and a similar number is planned for a lesser period in 1990. Also being considered is an increase in the numbers of locally engaged staff, including interpreters, in 1989.

Southern Africa

69. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British efforts to facilitate the peace process in Angola and Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: We have given our full and public support to the US-led negotiations, and we applaud the signature of agreements in New York on 22 December paving the way for Cuban troop withdrawal from Angola and for Namibian independence. We shall press those concerned to move on swiftly from agreement to implementation.

Chemical Weapons

70. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards an international ban on the use of chemical weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: Negotiations aimed at achieving a comprehensive global ban on chemical weapons continue at the conference on disarmament in Geneva. Progress has been made but complex issues remain to be resolved, particularly concerning verification.

Chittagong Hill Tracts

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Government policy on events in the Chittagong hill tracts in Bangladesh.

Mr. Eggar: We have made clear to the Bangladesh authorities the level of concern in this country about alleged abuses of rights of the tribal people in the Chittagong hill tracts. We are encouraged by the widespread recognition in Bangladesh of the need to find a political solution to the current problems.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 12 January 1989

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Quotas

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to comply with the ruling by the European Court of Justice that European Community legislation for milk quotas was deficient in that it did not take into account those who had ceased milk production under a Community-financed scheme in 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Commission has put forward proposals to deal with this problem, which were discussed by this House on 30 November. Discussion on these proposals will resume at the Council of Ministers (Agriculture) meeting on 23 and 24 January.

Eggs

Mr. Adley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of his Department's attempts to revitalise the egg market.

Mr. Ryder: I am delighted that the egg scheme has helped to restore stability to the market.

Capital Grants

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the farming industry following his recent announcement on the revision of capital grants.

Mr. Ryder: The proposals that I announced on 28 November for a new farm and conservation grant scheme have received a generally warm welcome from a wide range of agricultural organisations as well as from environmental, heritage and other bodies.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has of the occurrence of salmonella enteritidis phage 4 in wild birds.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no specific evidence of the occurrence of salmonella enteritidis phage 4 in wild birds, but it is recognised that wild birds are susceptible to infection with salmonella.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any evidence to suggest that salmonella enteritidis phage 4 infection of free range hens or their eggs may originate from wild birds.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Salmonella organisms are widespread in the environment and the potential for contamination through wild birds is known to exist. However, I have no specific evidence that salmonella enteritidis phage 4 type infection in laying hens and their eggs originates from wild birds.

Meat Tenderisers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the administration of meat tenderisers to farm animals shortly before slaughter.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Representations have been received following the announcement of our decision not to accept the Farm Animal Welfare Council's recommendations that the administration of tenderisers to cattle before slaughter should be banned. These representations are being given full consideration.

Horse Sales

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to introduce a code of practice on conditions at horse sales and markets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government's proposals for a new statutory order to protect the welfare of horses at markets, sales and fairs, and for a code of practice, were issued for comment to interested organisations in November. Following consideration of comments received, we will complete the new legislation and code of practice later this year.

Set Aside Scheme

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received regarding the set-aside scheme.

Mr. Ryder: I have received a variety of views from organisations and individuals about particular aspects of the scheme.

Chickens (Feedingstuffs)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many plants processing and producing feedingstuffs for chickens are in (a) England and (b) Wales; and what is the precise location of each one.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 10 January 1989]: Ninety-one protein processing plants in England and three in Wales produce animal protein for incorporation into animal feedingstuffs including feedingstuffs for chickens. Information on the identity of the plants is collected by my Department in order to carry out inspections as provided for by statute. It would be wrong to disclose such data for purposes other than those for which they were collected.

DEFENCE

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the effect of the availability of the Channel tunnel on the movement of troops and logistical arrangements for the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are considering the possibility of using the tunnel for the peacetime movement of personnel and material. Its use in an emergency is covered by an agreement between the Governments of the United Kingdom and France, but the tunnel does not form part of our reinforcement planning and is seen only as a potential bonus.

Low-flying Corridor (Edinburgh-Glasgow)

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what flow control exists in the low-flying corridor between Edinburgh and Glasgow; and on what date such flow control measures were introduced.

Mr. Neubert: A one-way south east to north west flow pattern was established to the west of Falkirk in August 1988 for military aircraft below 2,000 ft.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many air misses occurred at less than 2,000 ft outside controlled airspace in the area between Edinburgh and Glasgow in 1987 and 1988; and how many of these involved (i) two military aircraft, (ii) a military aircraft and a civil aircraft and (iii) two civil aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: There were no such air misses reported in this area in 1987. One such air miss report, involving three military and one civilian aircraft, was filed on 10 August 1988. A second such air miss report, involving one military and one civilian aircraft, was filed on 18 November 1988. Both reports are being investigated by the joint air miss section of the National Air Traffic Services and the observations of the joint air miss working group will be published in due course.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given to alteration of the structure and boundaries of the United Kingdom low-flying system in the Edinburgh-Glasgow area.

Mr. Neubert: Whilst the operation of the United Kingdom military low flying system is kept under continuous review, there are currently no plans to alter the structure of the system in the Edinburgh-Glasgow area.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying military aircraft movements were recorded in the gap between the Edinburgh and Glasgow avoidance areas in each year since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: Information on low-flying military aircraft movements is recorded on the basis of low-flying areas. It is not available for the area between Glasgow and Edinburgh, which forms only a part of a low flying area covering much of southern Scotland.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what instructions are given to military pilots concerning low flying over the town of Harthill;

(2) what instructions are given to military pilots concerning low flying over the town of Shotts.

Mr. Neubert: Military pilots are instructed to avoid overflying the centre of major conurbations and built-up areas at low level athough we cannot guarantee to avoid small communities such as Shotts and Harthill. Pilots will, however, make every effort to avoid populated areas wherever possible.

SCOTLAND

Organ Transplants

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of his organ transplant campaign.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On 29 December I announced proposals aimed at increasing the number of organs donated for transplantation. Details of the new arrangements are about to be issued for consultation. Health boards will be asked to keep specific records.

Nuvan 500 EC

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's marine laboratory's research into the environmental effect of Nuvan 500 EC; and when he expects the results to be published.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The results of studies of the toxicity of dichlorvos, the active ingredient of Nuvan 500 EC, to the larvel forms of the lobster homarus gammarus and the herring clupea hargenus will be published later this year.

Other studies of the effects on marine life of prolonged or repeated exposure to low levels of dichlorvos are planned.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action his Department is taking to prevent dichlorvos from Nuvan 500 EC from entering the aquatic environment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's marine laboratory is studying ways of minimising release of dichlorvos into the marine environment by current methods of treatment in co-operation with the fish farming industry.

Fish Farms

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department is undertaking to find environmentally acceptable treatments for sea lice on salmon farms.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Scientists at the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's marine laboratory are currently undertaking or taking part in collaborative studies of ways of minimising release of dichlorvos (the active ingredient of Nuvan 500 EC) after bath treatment of fish, and on possible alternative chemical or vaccine treatments for sea lice infestation.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce stricter guidelines controlling the size, number and spacing of farm sites and the size and stocking density of production units in fish farms; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: When my right hon. and learned Friend announced the outcome of the review of the consultative procedures operated by the Crown Estate Commissioners on 19 December, he indicated that the Crown Estate Commissioners have been revising their guidelines for the siting and design of fish farms first produced in 1987. I understand that a draft of this will shortly be the subject of consultation with interested parties. The Government have no plans to introduce separate guidance.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the frequency of inspections of fish farms and their effectiveness in control of the use of substances such as Nuvan 500 EC.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Advice which may have a bearing on the use of Nuvan 500 EC may be given by veterinary practitioners who prescribe it for use in treating sea lice infestation.

Fish farms are subject to inspection, as and when appropriate, by officials of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's marine laboratory in relation to diseases of fish legislation as well as by river purification boards and the Health and Safety Executive in relation to their functions.

Lockerbie Air Disaster

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding uranium carried on board the Pan American aircraft which crashed at Lockerbie; whether any has been traced to any water supply; what action he has taken; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Pan American aircraft which crashed at Lockerbie was carrying a quantity of depleted uranium as counterweights in the tailplane structure. These counterweights, each weighing around 1kg, are not a radiological or toxic hazard, and most have already been recovered. The material recovered so far is not a public health hazard.

None of the depleted uranium has been traced to a water supply. The solubility of the metal in water is extremely low and does not threaten water supplies. However, as a precautionary measure, Dumfries and Galloway regional council took water samples at Winterhope reservoir and at Terrona springs near Langholm which have been analysed by the National Radiological Protection Board. The results obtained can be accounted for by natural backgroundf radioactivity and show that levels are well within the World Health Organisation limits for drinking water and give no cause for concern.

My officials have been and remain in close contact with regional council staff throughout and following the incident.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider providing long-term financial assistance to Lockerbie to meet the cost of restoration and support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for home affairs and the environment has told Dumfries and Galloway regional council and Annandale and Eskdale district council that the Government will respond most sympathetically to requests for special financial assistance towards additional costs incurred by them arising from the disaster and for any additional capital expenditure allocations which might be required for restoration work. In particular, he announced on 5 January an additional allocation to Annandale and Eskdale district council which will allow an immediate start on a £1 million programme of reinstatement and improvement of the whole of the council housing in Lockerbie affected by the air disaster. As further restoration requirements are identified, the Government will consider how they and their agencies can best support the local authorities concerned in this work.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many family practitioners have facilities for breast screening for cancer.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Due to the nature and cost of the equipment involved, no family practitioners in Scotland have facilities for breast cancer screening by mammography, the most effective method for the detection of early breast cancer. The comprehensive screening service now being established should be available throughout Scotland by 1991. Individual practitioners can, of course, clinically examine patients for signs of breast cancer.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many family practitioners have computerised call/recall systems for cervical cancer.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally. Most health boards in Scotland now have at least an interim computerised call/recall system in operation for cervical cancer screening.

TRANSPORT

Vessel Losses

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what inquiries or investigations have been carried out into the sinking of the Ardlough, Ocean Gain, Mhari-L, Alert II, St. Patrick, Emma Jane and Inspire; what has been the result of such inquiries or investigations; which of the incidents took place in submarine exercise areas or normal submarine lanes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Inquiries were carried out by the Department's marine surveyors into casualties involving Ardlough, Ocean Gain, Mhari-L, Alert II, Emma Jane and Inspire, but not the French flag vessel St. Patrick. Of those investigated, only the Ardlough and Mhari-L were in a submarine exercise area. The positions of submarine lanes are classified information.

The surveyors found no evidence of submarine involvement in any of the cases investigated.

Boeing 737 Accident (Manchester Airport)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any means open to him to expedite publication of the report about the British Airtours Boeing 737 accident at Manchester airport on 22 August 1985.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The period for requesting a review board ends today. Production of the report can begin tomorrow if there is no last-minute request for a review.

The report is long and contains complex appendices in colour. Her Majesty's Stationery Office will require about seven weeks to produce the document.

THE ARTS

Sadler's Wells

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the proposed relocation of the Sadler's Wells royal ballet to Birmingham.

Mr. Luce: I have learnt of this proposal with great pleasure. I am very appreciative of the considerable contribution which the city of Birmingham is to make to the promotion of dance. The move will enable the Sadler's Wells royal ballet to perform on a larger scale and to tour more widely. It will bring ballet of the highest quality to more people than ever before. To facilitate the move, I propose to make an extra payment of £0·5 million to the Arts Council, to be passed to the royal opera house, in 1989-90.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Allowances and Reliefs

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the real increase in the direct tax allowances and reliefs published in table 6.5 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91", Cm. 288-I.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 15 March 1988, at columns 494-95.

The following table shows those items where subsequent revision has led to a change in the estimated percentage movement in real terms between 1986-87 and 1987-88 together with the latest estimate of that movement.

	Per cent. change
Income Tax:
Single person's allowance	−2
Widow's bereavement allowance	12
Relief for:
Lump sum payments to pensioners	−1
Qualifying interest on loans for purchase or improvement of owner-occupied etc. property	−1
Inheritance Tax/Capital Transfer Tax:
Transfers to charities on death	10

Company Cars

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax income was lost to the Exchequer in each of the years 1979 to 1987 through the provision of tax concessions for companies leasing company cars.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 January 1989]: I regret that information on the tax deductible expenditure of leasing company cars is not available centrally.

PRIME MINISTER

Brussels

Q15. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Brussels.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Court of Auditors

Q54. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the manner in which reports of the Court of Auditors are dealt with by the EEC; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government have consistently supported the work of the Court of Auditors. In particular, we were instrumental in ensuring that the court's annual reports are formally considered by the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers. We shall continue to press for appropriate follow-up action on the court's specific recommendations.

Cumbernauld and Kilsyth

Q89. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to visit Cumbernauld and Kilsyth.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

European Commission (Vice-Presidents)

Q95. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will discuss with the Chairman of the Council of Ministers, Felipe Gonzales, the methods of appointment of the vice-presidents of the European Commission.

The Prime Minister: No. The method of appointment of vice-presidents of the EC Commission is laid down in the EC treaties.

Cyprus

Q132. Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister when she last met the President of Cyprus.

The Prime Minister: I last met President Vassiliou of Cyprus in London on 25 November, when we reviewed progress in the intercommunal talks on the Cyprus problem.

Engagements

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 January.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 January.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 January.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 January.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 January.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 January.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 January.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 January.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Human Rights Conference, Moscow

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on the Soviet Union's proposal to hold an international conference on human rights in Moscow.

The Prime Minister: We have agreed in principle that the third stage of the CSCE conference on the human dimension should be held in Moscow. But our attendance depends upon the Soviet Union making further specific major human rights improvements between now and 1991.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Science and Engineering Research Council

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many members of the Science and Engineering Research Council are professionally qualified chemists;

(2) how many members of the Science and Engineering Research Council are professionally qualified (a) physicists, (b) biologists and (c) engineers.

Mr. Jackson: The Science and Engineering Research Council currently includes the following number of professionally qualified members in the categories requested:

	Number
Chemists	6
Physicists	6
Biologist	1
Engineers	3

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many members of the administrative or support staff of the Science and Engineering Research Council are professionally qualified chemists;

(2) how many members of the administrative or support staff of the Science and Engineering Research Council are professionally qualified (a) physicists, (b) biologists and (c) engineers.

Mr. Jackson: The number of SERC staff, possessing professional qualifications (at least first degree or equivalent) in the categories requested, on 30 November 1988, was as follows:

	Chemists	Physicists	Biologists	Engineers
Administration	14	18	36	6
Scientific and Engineering support	52	439	10	407
Total	66	457	46	413

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

1992 Hotline

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many calls have been received by his Department's 1992 hotline.

Mr. Maude: The DTI's 1992 hotline has received over 108,000 calls since it opened on 18 March.

Post Office (Industrial Relations)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will set up an independent inquiry into the state of industrial relations in the Post Office, involving specific reference to the situation during 1988 at the main post office in Melton Mowbray, Leicestershire; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I very much regret the unofficial industrial action which led to disruption in the Melton Mowbray sorting office in November, but responsibility for resolving difficulties of this nature must rest with the Post Office management and employees. I am informed by the Post Office chairman, Sir Bryan Nicholson, that, following the recent national strike, he has set up a high-level industrial relations review team, which will include an independent industrial relations expert from outside the Post Office. The Post Ofice unions have been invited to contribute to the review, the report of which will incorporate the findings of a separate examination of the situation at Melton Mowbray.

British Steel

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the privatisation of British Steel.

Mr. Atkins: The privatisation of British Steel was successfully completed at the end of last year. Despite uncertain stock market conditions, the United Kingdom offer for shares was 3·3 times subscribed, with over half a million applications from private investors. The taxpayer will receive £2,500 million from the sale and the company will now be better placed, following privatisation, to meet the challenges and opportunities of the international steel market.

Cellular Phones

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancashire whether he has any plans to permit Vodafone to sell air time directly to cellular phone users; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications, who alone has powers under the Telecommunications Act 1984 to consider modifications to the Racal-Vodafone licence which would permit this.

Singapore (Balance of Trade)

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current balance of trade between the United Kingdom and Singapore.

Mr. Alan Clark: The crude balance of visible trade with Singapore in the first 11 months of 1988 was (provisionally) in surplus by £47·1 million.

Fur and Fur Products

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the quantities of fur and fur products exported from the United Kingdom in each of the last five years broken down by country of destination.

Mr. Alan Clark: The table lists 18 of the largest countries of destination accounting in each year for over 90 per cent. of exports of these products:

WALES

Cancer Screening

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many family practitioners have facilities for breast screening for cancer.

Mr. Grist: In view of the specialised mammography equipment and radiological expertise required, breast screening in Wales is to be carried out by specialist units, not by individual family practitioners.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many family practitioners have computerised call/recall systems for cervical cancer.

Mr. Grist: Computerised call and recall for cervical screening is carried out in Wales by all family practitioner committees on behalf of district health authorities. Information is not held centrally on any supplementary systems operated by individual family practitioners.

National Parks (Planning Applications)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what statistics are kept by his Department concerning planning applications in Welsh national parks.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Statistics on planning applications are provided quarterly by the national parks in Wales on the general development control returns, form WOPS1 (national park) and form WOPS2, copies of which have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Explosives (South London)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement about the discovery of arms and explosives in south London on 20-21 December;

(2) what information he has on the source of the explosives discovered in south London on 20-21 December and the means by which they were brought into the country.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 10 January, at columns 487-88.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of (a) 17 to 20-year-olds and (b) adults, were sentenced to immediate custody for violence against the person, sexual offences, burglary, robbery, theft and handling, fraud and forgery, criminal damage, drug offences and indictment motoring, in magistrates and Crown courts, by each police force area during 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The information available is given in the following tables. Numbers sentenced for sexual offences and for robbery are very small for individual forces so that percentages based on these would be misleading.

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children under the age of 18 years who have been reported missing in the Metropolitan police district and are still missing after 28 days, have not now been found; and what are their sex and ages and their last known whereabouts.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The available information is given in the following table. The number of persons reported as missing in the past and still missing depends on the length of time since the report. Many people return from having been reported missing after two or three years. Hence the higher figures for 1986 and 1987 do not indicate an increase in trend.

Children aged under 18 reported missing in the Metropolitan police district and still untraced: by sex

Number

Year reported missing	Total	Male	Female
1983	4	0	4
1984	20	6	14
1985	30	18	12
1986	60	37	23
1987[1]	115	63	52

[1] New counting procedures were introduced from the beginning of 1987: hence the figures for previous years are not comparable.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has consulted European Economic Community countries which operate a national register for missing persons with a view to setting up such a register in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 19 December 1988]: No. A working party established by the Association of Chief Police Officers is reviewing police procedures for dealing with inquiries relating to missing persons. We will be willing to consider any matters the association may wish to put to us on completion of its review.

Racial Harassment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been in each year since enactment under (a) the Public Order Act and (b) the Malicious Communications Act for offences relating to racial harassment.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 21 December 1988]: The information available centrally, which may be incomplete, shows six prosecutions in 1987 under part III of the Public Order Act 1986 relating to acts intended or likely to stir up racial hatred. No information is yet available for 1988 or on the use of the Malicious Communications Act 1988, which did not come into force until September 1988.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Treaty of Rome

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which person or body, under the terms of the treaty of Rome is the final determinant of what constitutes an internal frontier in the context of article 8A of that treaty; and whether any such determination has been made or is under consideration.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Court of Justice is the final arbiter on questions of interpretation of the treaty of Rome. We are not aware of any determination being made in the terms suggested.

MacBride Principles

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the states in the United States of America about legislation based on the MacBride principles; in how many of those states the legislation was subsequently enacted; in how many is such legislation pending or being passed between one or other of the two Houses; and if he will list the states in those categories.

Mrs. Chalker: Our representatives in the United States are in touch with state legislatures about possible legislation based on the MacBride principles. Since 1985, legislation has been passed in 10 states—Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York and Rhode Island—and defeated in six. Of the five states which enacted MacBride Bills in 1988, four passed Bills which were significantly amended in their passage through state legislatures. In no state is legislation pending or between houses.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will state in the Official Report the representations he has made to the United States of America concerning the investment of funds in companies which do not follow the MacBride principles in Northern Ireland; and in which cities.

Mrs. Chalker: We have consistently opposed the campaign based on the MacBride principles because it could adversely affect investment and the creation of new jobs in Northern Ireland. Our representatives in the United States have been in touch with local legislators where MacBride legislation has been in prospect. The United States Government oppose the imposition of the MacBride principles on United States companies operating in Northern Ireland.

Citizenship

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding comparisons between citizenship, nationality and rights of abode of the people of Macao and people living in Hong Kong; and what response he has made.

Mr. Eggar: No representations have been received. No direct comparisons can be made, as historical and constitutional factors in the two cases are reflected in different national practices and legislation, as my noble Friend the Minister of State made clear at a press conference in Hong Kong yesterday.

ENERGY

British Coal (Subsidence)

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those recommendations from the report of the subsidence compensation review committee (Waddilove) which have now been implemented by British Coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Actions taken or undertakings given by British Coal to implement fully or in part recommendations made by the Waddilove committee are set out below (references in square brackets are to recommendations in the Waddilove report):

PREDICTION AND PREVENTION

Prediction

British Coal carries out detailed geological investigation where necessary [186(i)] and require their areas to give special attention to locations that are sensitive because of the possible environmental or social consequences of surface damage [186(iii)]. British Coal will also endeavour before mining begins to produce the best predictions possible, of the likely effect of subsidence damage on drainage systems in low-lying agricultural land. These predictions will serve as the basis for discussions with the farming community and water authorities on the scope for preventive and remedial work [186(iv)].

British Coal introduced additional measures in 1984 to ensure that subsidence costs are fully and consistently assessed and are included in the costing of proposed underground workings. Areas are expected to modify layouts or take prevention measures in order to reduce the likelihood of severe damage [186(v),(vi)].

The corporation now normally seeks discussion with planning authorities and other interested parties on the likely environmental effects of British Coal's proposals before submitting planning applications for the development of new mines [187(ix)].

Preventive and Precautionary Work

British Coal assesses systematically the scope for, and costs of, preventive measures, especially for larger buildings, when considering future mining plans. The corporation is willing to explain the scope and limitations of such measures at public meetings following the publication of the annual notice about future working [188(x)].

NOTIFICATION AND PUBLICITY

Mining Intentions

British Coal now provides each planning authority in coal-mining areas with a copy of the annual press notice and a plan (revised annually) showing the areas of coal likely to be worked over the next 12 months. The corporation is willing to discuss this information with local authority associations [189(ii)].

If requested to do so by more than one interested body, British Coal will set up a technical liaison committee to discuss their plans. The corporation will also co-operate with local subsidence liaison committees established by residents [189 (iii)].

Mining Inquiries

Agreement has virtually been reached with the Law Society for a standard inquiry search form for use in England and Wales. In responding to the new form, the corporation will, once the new system is fully established, indicate whether there is a current claim outstanding and how many others were settled during the previous five years [191 (viii)]. The corporation and the Law Society of Scotland have agreed to draw up a standard inquiry form for use in Scotland.

THE REPAIR OF SUBSIDENCE DAMAGE

British Coal operates in accordance with the Waddilove recommendation that the board's primary duty should be to repair damages and to make payment in lieu only in exceptional circumstances [192 (i), 193 (ix)]. The corporation's commitment to provide a good standard of repair in all cases already goes a long way towards meeting the recommendation that damaged property should be restored to its pre-damaged condition so far as is practicable [192 (iii)].

It is now British Coal's practice to prepare a fully costed and itemised schedule of repairs for each case of subsidence damage for which they accept liability. Claimants are able to choose who should carry out repairs to their damaged property and land [193 (iv)]. Independent adjudication is available for straightforward disagreements over the initial schedule of works and costs. Wherever practical the completed repairs will be subject to final inspection jointly with the claimant, the claimant's agent or both [193 (v)].

Where British Coal decide to buy a property because the only realistic course of action is to demolish it, they will pay the full market value of the property as if the damage for which they had accepted liability had not occurred. After demolition of the property, the site will be kept tidy to minimise dereliction. Independent adjudication will be considered where there is a dispute over the purchase price [193 (x)].

Interim Repairs

Areas are required to make good damage with appropriate interim repairs if there are sufficient periods of stability between two mining operations, and will endeavour to ensure that property will not be left in a damaged state for long periods. Areas are required to send an explanatory letter to a claimant to whom a stop notice is issued indicating a likely timetable for final repairs [194 (xi)].

Temporary Accommodation

British Coal seeks to ensure that temporary accommodation is both suitable and acceptable to claimants who have had to leave their homes [195 (xii)] and accept responsibility for property vacated during repairs [195 (xiii)].

Assistance to Claimants

British Coal provides that any payment for specialist advice should be paid direct to claimants [196 (xv)].

SCOPE OF COMPENSATION PROVISION

British Coal already exercises its discretion to reimburse claimants for reasonable expenses incurred in pursuing claims. This will be made statutory [198 (1)].

British Coal will continue to treat claimants with consideration so as to minimise distress [199 (ii)]. It will consider payments for loss of home amenity to the small minority of claimants who experience exceptional inconvenience and disturbance during repairs [200 (iii)].

British Coal's Brown Book spells out the criteria governing the Board's decision to purchase property. Independent adjudication on valuation is available [201 (v)].

Discussions between British Coal and the Building Societies Association have taken place on how to deal with the losses to a society which might arise from subsidence [201 (vi)].

British Coal seeks to minimise the effects of subsidence damage on small businesses by, for example, carrying out additional interim repairs or by providing temporary alternative accommodation [202 (vii)].

British Coal is prepared to compensate for diminution in the agricultural land value of the balance of a holding which has been affected by subsidence [202 (viii)].

British Coal pays a commuted sum to public authorities to meet any increased maintenance and running costs following repairs [202 (ix)].

RESOLVING DISPUTES

When British Coal writes to claimants, it always encloses the Department of Energy's leaflet on claimant's rights and its own Brown Book, both of which refer to the possibility of local independent arbitration [203 (1)]. British Coal will recommend the use of independent arbitration in appropriate cases [204 (iv)].

Contributions to Claimant's Costs

In relatively minor cases, where an unsuccessful applicant to the Lands Tribunal has not acted unreasonably, British Coal will seek only nominal costs and may consider forgoing costs if it appeals from a decision of the Lands Tribunal to the Court of Appeal for the purpose of resolving a point of law of general importance [205 (vi)].

FRAMEWORK OF CONTROL, MANAGEMENT AND MONITORING

The corporation has prepared a statement of its policy on repair and compensation for subsidence damage [208 (iii)]. It has also issued guidance to all areas on the circumstances in which the corporation would consider making discretionary payments [208 (iv)].

The corporation's audit committee is responsible for audit monitoring the handling by areas of subsidence claims. It is independent of the areas and reports to a corporation member [208 (v)]. British Coal has set up a computerised management information system which is beginning to build up data on trends in subsidence claims and costs. Where practicable, the corporation has incorporated historic data from the areas which will assist the corporation to monitor effectively and compare trends within the areas [209 (vii), 209 (viii)].

British Coal fully accepts the need to be as flexible as possible on the deployment of staff. It has increased staff numbers and employed numerous outside specialists [209 (ix)].

The corporation has now provided the Secretary of State with its first annual report on the administration of its repair and compensation system, and this has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses [208 (vi)].

CEGB (Land Holdings)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were the total land holdings of the Central Electricity Generating Board at the latest available date for each region of England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the CEGB, and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

ENVIRONMENT

County Structure Plans

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish a White Paper in the future of county structure plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend hopes to do so shortly.

Water Authorities (Chairmen)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the criteria used in paying any annual bonuses to chairmen of the water authorities in 1987-88; and if he will list any bonuses paid to each of the chairmen in 1987-88.

Mr. Ridley: Bonuses in respect of the financial year 1987-88 are payable to the chairmen and executive members of those water authorities which have achieved or exceeded the performance targets set for them by the Government. The bonuses paid to date to chairmen in respect of 1987-88 have been as follows:

Rating Reform

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the poll tax which will be levelled in each of the districts of Derbyshire (a) in 1990 and (b) in 1991, at current prices.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. I refer to my reply of 19 December to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), at column 41, regarding future community charge levels. The level of the charges will depend on authorities' decisions as to their level of spending.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the table showing the relationship of rates and community charge to net household income on an equivalent basis as in the answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), 25 January, Official Report, columns 37-38.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The table updating figures F5 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) is as follows. The basis for adjustment to equivalent income figures is provided in paragraph F14 of the Green Paper.

These figures show that for all ranges of equivalent income, except those between £100 and £200 per week, community charges are on average less than domestic rates after allowing for rebates, and form a lower proportion of income.

Football Clubs (Identity Scheme)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking, in accordance with paragraph 1.5 of the document, "Releasing Enterprise" (Cm. 512) to obtain a compliance cost assessment in respect of his plans for control of spectators at designated football matches.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 10 January 1989]: The Football Spectators Bill, which will be introduced in the House of Lords shortly, will give statutory backing to a national membership scheme for football spectators. It will be for the Football Membership Authority (FMA), which, subject to the will of Parliament, will be appointed by the Secretary of State, to draw up the detailed scheme. We hope that the Football Association and the Football League will establish a joint body to form the FMA. A compliance cost assessment will be undertaken at the appropriate time.

Football Hooliganism

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has commissioned into the hooliganism linked with football from the Sir Norman Chester Centre for Football Research; and what were its conclusions.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 10 January 1989]: My Department and the Football Trust funded an investigation into the measures used by seven Football League clubs to improve spectator behaviour. A summary of the research findings and recommendations was published last July. No further research has been commissioned.

Local Authorities (Economic Development)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 21 December, what will be the form of, and time scale for, the consultation with local authorities and others on the subject of local authority economic development initiatives.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 10 January 1989]: As I indicated in my reply of 21 December, at columns 266-67, there will be consultation at the appropriate time with the local authority associations and other interested bodies on the regulations relating to the new power for local authority economic development.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 21 December to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis), if he will make a statement on the boundaries between local authorities and the other organisations in the context of local authority economic development.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 10 January 1989]: Local authorities, voluntary organisations and private enterprise all have a role to play in local economic development. The local authorities' role is primarily to stimulate the local economy by preparing the way for effective initiatives by voluntary bodies and the private sector.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) of 21 December on local authority economic development initiatives, what is his policy on the provision of funds specifically designed to facilitate the work of organisations that have incurred a deficit in their initial operational activity where direct assistance or rent and rate free periods are designed to ensure their future commercial viability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 10 January 1989]: We do not favour an open-ended commitment to pay grant where the size of the grant is related to a deficit which has not yet been determined. A grant of a specific amount of money towards an initial deficit may, depending on circumstances, be appropriate.

Thames Water Authority

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call for a report from the chairman of the Thames water authority listing all land currently held, and all land that has been bought and sold since 1979 and who the vendors and buyers were and at what price.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 10 January 1989]: Information on the land holdings of all the regional water authorities is being gathered as part of the preparations for flotation. Figures for receipts from sale of fixed assets are given in the published annual accounts of water authorities. I have no plans to seek additional information in respect of past transactions.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the water rates for the Thames water authority for each year since 1979; and what was the rate of return on capital.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 10 January 1989]: The information requested is presented in the following tables. The rate of return on capital represents the current cost operating profit as a percentage of the mean current cost net asset values for that year. The figures for the rate of return on capital for 1979-80 and 1980-81 are not available on this basis.

Planning Applications (Animal Welfare)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether animal welfare is a criterion relevant to the consideration of planning applications under article 18 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Whether the welfare of animals is a material consideration for planning decision will depend upon the circumstances of a particular development proposal.

Severn-Trent Water Authority

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to call in the planning application made by Severn-Trent water authority to convert its site at Dosthill, Tamworth, into a waste disposal landfill site.

Mr. Chope: This application has not yet been referred to the Secretary of State, but, on the information currently before him, it does not appear to raise issues which warrant his intervention.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance Fund

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the net surplus or deficit on the national insurance fund for each year since 1977 (a) including and (b) excluding Treasury contributions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

(£ million)

	National Insurance Fund surplus/deficit (1)	Treasury Supplement (2) contribution to National Insurance Fund	(1)-(2)
1977-78	678	1,537	−859

Disability Alliance (Report)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration his Department has given to the report from the Disability Alliance entitled "Hard to Claim, Impossible to Live On", a copy of which has been sent to the Minister with responsibility for the disabled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We shall consider carefully all comments we receive about benefits for people with disabilities, including the Disability Alliance's recent report about severe disablement allowance, when we are examining the findings of the surveys undertaken by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response is being made to the letter sent to the Minister with responsibility for the disabled on 20 December 1988 by the Disability Alliance in regard to the severe disablement allowance; if he will place copies of the correspondence in the Library; and if there is any action he will be taking.

Mr. Scott: I have replied to the Disability Alliance and have noted its comments on severe disablement allowance and its proposals for change. I have sent a copy of my reply to the right hon. Member. My response to the Disability Alliance makes it clear that we do not have any plans for major changes to the structure of severe disablement allowance or other benefits for the disabled pending our consideration of the reports on the surveys of the disabled undertaken by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether dependants of Her Majesty's forces personnel can claim severe disablement allowance while they are overseas.

Mr. Scott: Her Majesty's forces dependants who have qualified for severe disablement allowance can normally continue to receive it when they go overseas. Unless helped by the EC regulations, however, they cannot make an initial claim for this benefit when abroad. We propose to introduce a provision to remove the bar on claiming overseas for this category of persons.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Income and Allowances

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. and right hon. Members have sources of income other than their parliamentary salaries.

Mr. Wakeham: I would refer the hon. Member to the Register of Members' Interests.

HEALTH

Environmental Controls

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has any plans to devolve funds for all types of environmental controls to the district and regional health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Environmental controls are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many family practitioners in England have facilities for breast screening for cancer.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for providing breast cancer screening services lies with regional health authorities in England. This service is being set up over the three years to 1990. At least one breast screening centre has been established in each region and plans for extending the service to cover all districts are well advanced.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many family practitioners in England have a computerised call/recall system for cervical cancer.

Mr. Freeman: All family practitioner committes have a computerised call and recall system which is used to offer a service to all eligible women between the ages of 20 and 64 inclusive.

White Paper (NHS)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has yet decided upon the date for the release of the White Paper on the future of the National Health Service; and if he will give that date.

Mr. Mellor: We shall be publishing a White Paper shortly.

Rehabilitation Hostels

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been underclaimed by the city of Nottingham in grants and benefits from his Department for the occupants of its rehabilitation hostels since the enactment of the National Health Service Act 1977; how much of the arrears have so far been paid; and how much more will be made available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

We are not aware of any arrears owed in respect of these claimants.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been under claimed by the London borough of Greenwich in grants and benefits from his Department for the occupants of its rehabilitation hostels since the enactment of the National Health Service Act 1977; how much of the arrears have so far been paid; and how much more will be made available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: [holding answer 13 December 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

Details of claims and payments of Supplementary Benefit and Income Support are kept in individual clerical records. The information requested concerning this group of claimants could not be obtained without disproportionate expense.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Irish Criminal Law Jurisdiction Act 1976

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General in how many cases application has been made for the Irish Criminal Law Jurisdiction Act 1976 to be employed in the Republic of Ireland.

The Attorney-General: Prosecution under the provisions of the extraterritorial legislation depends upon evidence being available to the prosecuting authority in the jurisdiction where the alleged offender is found. It does not depend upon any application being made by the prosecuting authority of another jurisdiction. Evidence and information with regard to alleged or suspected offenders may be and is communicated either to the Commissioner of the Gardai in the Republic of Ireland or to the prosecuting authority in the Republic of Ireland for such action as the prosecuting authority in the Republic considers appropriate.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of employment training managers have been approved (i) nationally and (ii) in Oxfordshire.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 22 December 1988]: None so far. The first awards of approved training manager status are expected to be made in mid-1990.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether he has any plans to introduce procedures to ensure the quality control of training agents, with particular reference to initial action plans for trainees;

(2) what levels of performance are expected in determining whether an organisation qualifies as a training manager, under the Training Agency, in respect of (a) staff policies and practices, (b) premises and equipment, (c) equal opportunities policy, (d) financial viability, (e) managing action plans, (f) training, (g) effective programme review programmes, (h) assessment, recording of progress and achievement and use of vocational qualifications and (i) health and safety policy.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Information on the levels of performance expected from training managers under the headings requested has been published by the Training Agency. Copies of the criteria for both training agents and training managers have been placed in the library.

The Training Agency is currently working with each training agent to agree proposals to help develop their performance, including work on action plans.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to publish details of the type of training being provided by training managers and agents.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 22 December 1988]: Information on the numbers of trainees undergoing training on project-based places and on placements with employers should be available in January. Other than this information, my right hon. Friend has no plans at present to publish further details of the type of training being provided by training managers. Training agents do not provide training.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Citizenship

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Portugal or within the Council of Ministers regarding harmonisation of the citizenship and nationality arrangements for people in dependent territories of each member country of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Schools (Statistics)

10. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will detail, at primary and secondary level, the number of (a) Church of England, (b) Roman Catholic, (c) non-denominational and (d) independent schools in the Province; how many children attend them; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: These categories are not entirely applicable to Northern Ireland. However, some 46 per cent. of all schools in Northern Ireland, providing for approximately 48 per cent. of all pupils, are under Roman Catholic management. The great majority of the remaining schools are under the management of the education and library boards. Statutorily grant-aided schools in Northern Ireland are open to pupils of all religious denominations or none.

Health Service Staff (Regrading)

11. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the operation in Northern Ireland of the new grading structure for nurses, midwives and health visitors.

Mr. Needham: The clinical grading criteria recommended by the Nurses Pay Review Body and fully accepted by the Government have been implemented by health and social services boards.

Nurses have sought the introduction of clinical grading for some time and its implementation is a substantial achievement. Those groups with the highest levels of clinical skills and responsibilities have, as was always intended, gone into the higher grades in largest numbers and have therefore received the highest average pay increases. But all staff groups have received a substantial pay rise.

Variable Beef Premium

12. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has put forward to compensate farmers for their loss of income caused by the cessation of the variable beef premium on 31 December.

Mr. Viggers: This is a matter affecting beef farmers throughout the United Kingdom and negotiations with the European Community are handled by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on behalf of the United Kingdom as a whole. The Government are opposed to termination of the beef variable premium unless acceptable terms for the replacement premiums are available.

Negotiations on reform of the EC beef support arrangements are continuing. It has been decided to extend the existing support arrangements, including the beef variable premium, until 5 March 1989.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

13. Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made in the review of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: Work on the review of the workings of the Intergovernmental Conference is continuing. I invited interested parties and individuals to submit their views on the workings of the conference by the end of 1988. A number of contributions have been received and these are being considered. As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State has confirmed, the House will also have an opportunity to express its views.

20. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on the working of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: The most recent meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference took place in Belfast on 14 December 1988. A copy of the joint statement issued after the meeting, which lists the subjects discussed, has been placed in the Library. As I told the House earlier this afternoon, a review of the workings of the Intergovernmental Conference is currently in progress as provided under article 11 of the agreement. The House will have an opportunity to express its views before the review is completed.

15. Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the last meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference took place; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Tom King: The last meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference took place on 14 December 1988. A copy of the joint statement issued after the meeting, which lists the subjects discussed, has been placed in the Library.

Security

16. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of deaths caused by terrorist action in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

23. Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone (Mr. Maginnis).

Short Brothers

17. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the chairman of Short Brothers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: My right hon. Friend and I have met the chairman of Shorts on a number of occasions. I last met him this morning.

Privatisation

18. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for the sale of Harland and Wolf and Shorts plc.

Mr. Viggers: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer).

US Government (Financial Aid)

19. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions the United States Government have paid money over to Her Majesty's Government to be spent in Northern Ireland in the past 10 years.

Dr. Mawhinney: None, However, the United States Government have made three contributions, totalling £120 million, to the International Fund for Ireland. The fund is independent of the Government.

Unemployment

21. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about unemployment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The past two years have seen a significant reduction in unemployment in Northern Ireland. By November 1988, the latest date for which unemployment figures are available, seasonally adjusted unemployment had fallen in 21 of the last 25 months. The Government welcome the improvements that have occurred and continue to give a high priority to reducing the level of unemployment.

Planning Appeals

22. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce legislation to give objectors a right of appeal against the granting of planning permission.

Mr. Needham: No.

Harland and Wolff

70. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will next meet trade union representatives from Harland and Wolff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: I have no immediate plans for a further meeting with trade union representatives from Harland and Wolff. I last met representatives of the Confederation of Shipbuilding and Engineering Unions on 31 October 1988, when we exchanged views on the future of the company, and I have since written to the confederation in response to a paper which the representatives left with me. A copy of this response has been placed in the Library.

71. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to secure new orders for Harland and Wolff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The Government believe that the best prospects for Harland and Wolff lie in its return to the private sector and they are not willing to permit the company to enter into new contracts until future arrangements for the yard are resolved.

Extradition

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he plans to hold further discussions with his Republic of Ireland counterparts within the framework of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, on questions affecting extradition, in-country prosecutions and related matters.

Mr. Tom King: All matters which affect Anglo-Irish relations, including extradition and extraterritorial prosecutions, are discussed, as appropriate, under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Life Sentence Review Boards

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to review the procedures of the life sentence review boards for prisoners in Northern Ireland who are serving indeterminate sentences.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The procedures for reviewing life sentences are kept under continuous review, but there are no immediate plans to make changes of major significance in a system which has resulted in release dates for over 100 prisoners.

RUC (Caution)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the caution to be issued to suspects arrested by the Royal Ulster Constabulary under the terms of the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1988.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 10 January 1989]: On 30 November I issued to the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary a document entitled "Guidance to the Chief Constable on the Criminal Evidence (NI) Order 1988". The guidance contains, inter alia, the new forms of caution to be used by the RUC in circumstances where the provisions of articles 3, 5 or 6 of the order apply.

The guidance comes into effect on 15 December 1988. I have placed a copy of it in the Library of the House.

WALES

National Curriculum

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to accommodate history in Wales within the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am establishing a History Committee for Wales (HCW) to advise me on the overall curriculum for history in Welsh schools. The history committee will work within the broad framework to be devised by the history working group which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science has announced today.

The HCW will take account of the working group's recommendations, and will report to me by April 1990 on the attainment targets and programmes of study for history in Wales. I expect the committee to give weight to the essential core of British history which should be common to all children in England and Wales, as well as covering the history of Wales. The committee will be chaired by Professor Robert Rees Davies, professor of history at University College of Wales, Aberystwyth. I will announce the rest of the committee's membership shortly.

Terms of reference of the committee are as follows:

Backgound

1. The Education Reform Act 1988 provides for the establishment of a National Curriculum of core and other foundation subjects for pupils of compulsory school age in England and Wales. The Act empowers the Secretary of State to specify, as he considers appropriate for each foundation subject, including history, that there should be clear objectives —attainment targets—for the knowledge, skills and understanding which pupils of different abilities and maturities should be expected to have acquired by the end of the academic year in which they reach the ages 7, 11, 14 and 16; and to promote them, programmes of study describing the content, skills and processes which need to be covered during each key stage of compulsory eduction. Taken together, the attainment targets and programmes of study will provide the basis for assessing a pupil's performance, in relation both to expected attainment and to the next steps needed for the pupil's development.

2. Both the objectives (attainment targets) and means of achieving them (programmes of study) should leave scope for teachers to use their professional talents and skills to develop their own schemes of work, within a statutory framework which is known to all. It is the task of the Working Group on History to advise on that framework for history.

3. The History Committee for Wales is asked to liaise closely with the History Working Group and to submit preliminary advice to the Secretary of State by 10 June 1989 outlining:—

i. the contents of Welsh history which should be incorporated into the history curriculum in Wales;

ii. its preliminary views on the extent to which Welsh perspectives should influence the wider study of history.

4. By April 1990 the History Committee for Wales is to submit to the Secretary of State a final report setting out and justifying a balanced and complete curriculum for history in Wales, in the light of the final recommendations of the History Working Group.

Approach

5. In carrying out its task the Committee should consult informally and selectively with relevant interests and have regard to:—

i. the terms of reference, supplementary guidance, ongoing work and Interim and Final Reports of the History Working Group;

ii. the broad framework for assessment and testing announced by the Government on 7 June 1988 and subsequent development of it in the light of advice from the School Examinations and Assessment Council;

iii. the contributions which history can make to learning about other subjects and cross-curricular themes, and which they in turn can make to learning in history; and

iv. best practice and the results of any relevant research and development.

M4 (Tenders)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report for each year since 1979 those sections of the M4 for which tenders have been invited specifying the sections and the actual dates.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Since 1979 tenders have been invited for major works on sections of the M4 in Wales as follows:

Year	Section of M4 motorway	Title	Date tenders invited
1980	Coldra to Tredegar Park junctions 24-28	Widening to 3 lanes	7 January 1980
1981	Newhouse to Coldra junctions 22-24	Installation of communications cable	27 July 1981
1981	Lonlas to Pont Abraham junctions 44-49	Renewal of traffic signs	8 September 1981
1985	Newhouse to Coldra junctions 22-24	Television surveillance system	18 February 1985
1985	Newhouse to Coldra junctions 22-24	Major resurfacing	14 March 1985
1985	Miskin to Pencoed junctions 34-35	Resurfacing	1 June 1985
1986	Castleton and Llandarcy junctions 29-43	Advance direction signing	1 August 1986
1987	Pontardulais bypass junctions 44-48	Surface dressing	10 March 1987
1987	Newhouse to Pont Abraham junctions 22-49	Signalling and communications maintenance	29 June 1987

National Parks

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the percentages of planning applications were, in each of the Welsh national parks, which were (a) allowed, (b) dismissed, (c) withdrawn and (d) undetermined for each of the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

Planning applications
Planning activity within the Welsh National Parks

Withdrawn	2·8	6·9	6·8	n/a	n/a
Undetermined	22·8	21·2	18·3	n/a	n/a

The "undetermined" column gives a "snapshot" figure of those applications awaiting decision at the end of March in each financial year.

Figures for the latest two years are not compatible with earlier years, because the definition of "planning applications" used on the WOPS1 and WOPS2 general development control forms has been widened.

Roads

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether a line of route and a date for commencement of work have been agreed for the proposed Robeston Wathen, Pembrokeshire, by-pass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A route for this scheme has not yet been agreed. Information on its timing will be included in the forthcoming edition of "Roads in Wales".

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the next edition of "Roads in Wales."

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Before the end of the current financial year.

Water Act 1973

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions since the coming into force of the Water Act 1973 disputes have been submitted to him for determination under the provisions of section 11(4) of that Act; and if he will specify the local authority area in which such disputes have risen.

Mr. Grist: None.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions since the coming into force of the Water Act 1973 he has issued directions under the provisions of section 4(10) of that Act to the National Water Council; and what was the purpose of each such direction.

Mr. Grist: None.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions since the coming into force of the Water Act 1973 he has issued directions under the provisions of section 17(5) of that Act to water authorities; and for which estuary each such direction was made.

Mr. Grist: None.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions since the coming into force of the Water Act 1973 he has issued directions under the provisions of section 5(1) of that Act to water authorities; and for what purpose each such direction was made.

Mr. Grist: None.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions since the coming into force of the Water Act 1973 he has issued directions under the provisions of section 5(2) of that Act to water authorities; and for what purpose each such direction was made.

Mr. Grist: None.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Channel 5

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received recent representations from the Scottish Trades Union Congress regarding the location of main offices for Channel 5; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No representations have been received. Paragraph 6.21 of the Government White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s" proposes that Channel 5 licences should be national in their scope. It would be for licencees to decide where to locate their headquarters.

Viraj Mendis

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that no action will be taken to deport Viraj Mendis before his Department replies to solicitors' letters dated 21 and 30 December 1988 concerning the changed situation in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if there is intention to take any action against Mr. Viraj Mendis in Manchester before all domestic legal remedies have been applied; and if he will make a statement:

(2) if it is his intention to reply to the two letters from Mr. Viraj Mendis concerning the situation in Sri Lanka, dated 21 and 30 December 1988 respectively, before any action is taken against him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The decision to deport Mr. Mendis has been reviewed and endorsed by the independent appellate authorities, the Divisional Court and the Court of Appeal. His petition for leave to move to the House of Lords has also been rejected. On 28 December, the court rejected a subsequent application for judicial review of my right hon. Friend's refusal to give assurances to his solicitors, first, that no steps would be taken to remove Mr. Mendis pending a substantive response to their representations and, secondly, that no steps would be taken to remove him for at least 48 hours following notification of the response.

We are further considering the representations received from Mr. Mendis' solicitors.

New Year Celebrations (Arrests)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests were made in the Trafalgar square area during new year's eve and new year's day; how many police and members of the public were injured; and what was the estimated size of the gathering.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that a total of 120 arrests were made during the new year celebrations in Trafalgar square. Eleven police officers were injured and 148 injuries to members of the public were reported, of whom 64 were taken to hospital. It is estimated that around 65,000 people were present.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests were made during new year celebrations on drunk and disorderly grounds in England and Wales; and how many police officers were injured.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Reading Rock Festivals

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests were made at the 1987 and 1988 Reading rock festivals.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that the number of arrests was 146 and 178 respectively.

Prevention of Terrorism Act

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people held under the Prevention of Terrorism Act since 1 January 1988 have been (a) allowed and (b) refused legal representation during questioning.

Mr. Hurd: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what communications he has had with the European Court of Justice concerning the operation of the Prevention of Terrorism Act.

Mr. Hurd: None.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been held under the Prevention of Terrorism Act since 1 December 1988; what areas of the United Kingdom and other countries they were from; for what period they were held before being charged; and how many were subsequently charged.

Mr. Hurd: Information on the operation of the prevention of terrorism legislation is compiled quarterly and published in Home Office statistical bulletins at the end of the month following the quarter covered, or as soon as possible thereafter. I will reply to the hon. Member when the statistics for the fourth quarter of 1988 have been published.

Independent Television Commission

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether the Independent Television Commission will have a statutory duty (a) to draw up a code governing standards and practice of advertising and prescribing the advertisements and methods of advertisements to be prohibited and (b) to secure compliance with the code;

(2) whether the Independent Television Commission will be required to draw up television programme guidelines on (i) expression of opinion by programme companies, (ii) legal matters, (iii) promotion and presentation, (iv) sponsorship and indirect advertising, (v) competition and reward shows, (vi) charitable appeals and publicity for charities and (vii) communication with the public;

(3) whether the Independent Television Commission will be required to draw up television programme guidelines on (a) decency and the portrayal of violence, (b) feature films, (c) technical quality, (d) accuracy, (e) privacy and gathering of information, (f) fairness and impartiality, (g) party politics, politicians and programmes and (h) crime, anti-social behaviour, etc.

Mr. Renton: The general responsibility of the proposed Independent Television Commission for oversight of programme content, advertising and sponsorship was described in paragraph 5 of annex A to the White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality" (November 1988, Cm. 517). We will bring forward draft legislation in the light of the comments that we have invited on the White Paper.

Ashford Remand Centre

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the nature and extent of catering and canteen services provision at Ashford remand centre; by whom such provision is made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 16 December 1988]: As my right hon. Friend announced last March, Ashford remand centre has been reopened on a temporary basis to enable prisoners to be moved from police cells.

Because of a shortage of trained prison officer caterers, catering for inmates is being provided by a contractor, Sutcliffe Catering South-East, whose contract requires it to provide meals to the standards and dietary scales laid down for the prison service as a whole.

In the light of experience at the two temporary camps closed recently, the inmates canteen is being operated by the NAAFI; the range of stocks is based on those held in other prison canteens.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

National Curriculum

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his plans for establishing the complete national curriculum.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I are establishing forthwith a working group to make recommendations on attainment targets and programmes of study for history within the national curriculum in England and Wales.

The working group's terms of reference are set out in the table. I have also sent supplementary guidance to the group's chairman, a copy of which I have placed in the Library. We are grateful to Commander Saunders Watson, until recently the president of the Historic Houses Association, and currently the chairman of the Heritage Education Trust, for agreeing to chair the history working group. The other members are:

Mr R M Guyver, Wembury primary school, Plymouth;
Mr J Hendy, Director of Education, Stockport;
Mr H Hobhouse, author;
Mr P Livsey, adviser in history and geography, county Durham;
Mrs A Low-Beer, Bristol university;
Dr A Prochaska, secretary and librarian, Institute of Historical Research;
Dr J M Roberts, Merton college, Oxford university;
Mrs C White, Garth Hill comprehensive school, Bracknell; and Dr G Elwyn Jones of University College, Swansea, who will also be a member of the History Committee for Wales announced today by my right hon. Friend.

The group will begin work at once. It will give interim advice by 30 June 1989 and final advice by Christmas 1989. This will enable attainment targets and programmes of study in history to begin to be introduced in schools from the autumn of 1991.

Our outline timetable for the development as appropriate of attainment targets, programmes of study and guidelines in other foundation subjects, and for their implementation in schools, is as follows:

Geography: working group to be established, Easter 1989; implementation to begin in schools—autumn 1991.

Modern foreign languages: working group to be established, July 1989; implementation to begin in schools—autumn 1992 at the latest.

Music, art and physical education: arrangements set up for considering the content of guidelines—June 1990; implementation in schools—autumn 1992.

This timetable will secure that either agreed requirements, or proposals, relating to the full national curriculum are publicly availalbe by mid-1991.

National Curriculum Working Group on History: Terms of Reference

Background

1. The Education Reform Act 1988 provides for the establishment of a National Curriculum of core and other foundation subjects for pupils of compulsory school age in England and Wales. The Act empowers the Secretary of State to specify, as he considers appropriate for each foundation subject, including history, that there should be clear objectives—attainment targets—for the knowledge, skills, and understanding which pupils of different abilities and maturities should be expected to have acquired by the end of the academic year in which they reach the ages of 7, 11, 14 and 16; and to promote them, programmes of study describing the content, skills and processes which need to be covered during each key stage of compulsory education. Taken together, the attainment targets and programmes of study will provide the basis for assessing a pupil's performance, in relation both to expected attainment and to the next steps needed for the pupil's development.

2. Both the objectives (attainment targets) and means of achieving them (programmes of study) should leave scope for teachers to use their professional talents and skills to develop their own schemes of work, within a statutory framework which is known to all. It is the task of the Working Group on History to advise on that framework for history.

The Task

3. The Working Group is asked to submit an interim report to the Secretaries of State by 30 June 1989 outlining and, as far as possible, exemplifying:

(i) the contribution which history should make to the overall school curriculum and how that will inform the Group's thinking about attainment targets and programmes of study;

(ii) its provisional thinking about the knowledge, skills and understanding which pupils of different abilities and maturities should be expected to have attained and be able to demonstrate at key ages; and the profile components into which attainment targets should be grouped;

(iii) its thinking about the programmes of study which would be consistent with the attainment targets provisionally identified; and

(iv) the key elements within those programmes of study that it considers to be essential at each key stage for children throughout England and Wales, bearing in mind the need for a balanced history curriculum for all pupils and, in Wales, the need to allow room within that curriculum for appropriate attention to the history of Wales.

4. By Christmas 1989 the Working Group is to submit a final report to the Secretaries of State setting out and justifying its final recommendations on attainment targets and the programmes of study for history.

Approach

5. In carrying out its task the Group should consult informally and selectively with relevant interests and have regard to the work of other subject groups, in particular those on English, Welsh and, in due course, on geography. Additionally the Group should take account of:

(i) the broad framework for assessment and testing announced by the Government on 7 June 1988 and subsequent development of it in the light of advice from the School Examinations and Assessment Council;

(ii) the contributions which history can make to learning about other subjects and cross-curricular themes, and which they in turn can make to learning in history;

(iii) best practice and the results of any relevant research and development;

(iv) the work of the History Committee for Wales (HCW); and

(v) the issues covered in the supplementary guidance to the Group's Chairman.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Pets

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is his policy towards the admittance of pets to the House of Commons.

Mr. Wakeham: Only pets belonging to residents are permitted in the House of Commons area of the Palace of Westminster.

In the House of Commons outbuildings, pets are permitted provided that they are kept under proper control and cause no nuisance.

United States Congress (Publications)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will take steps to arrange for United States Congressional publications to be made available to hon. Members on the same conditions as United Nations publications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: No. Right hon. and hon. Members may apply for United Nations publications on a green demand form because Her Majesty's Stationery Office acts as an agent for this international body. HMSO does not act as an agent for United States congressional publications, nor for any other overseas national body.

As the hon. Member will be aware, microfiche copies of the congressional record are held in the Library and printouts of selected passages from these are available on request.

Satellite Television

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) whether it is his intention to purchase a satellite dish for the Houses of Parliament to receive Sky Channel satellite television;

(2) whether a room will be provided for hon. Members to view Sky Channel satellite television after 5 February 1989.

Mr. Wakeham: I have no such plans at present. The provision of facilities for the reception and viewing of satellite television programmes has not yet been considered by the relevant Committees of each House. Any request for such consideration should be addressed to the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Ministers (Contracts)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will take steps to introduce a contract of employment for Government Ministers.

The Prime Minister: No.

H Cabinet Committee

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what the H Cabinet Committee has discussed and what decisions have been reached during the last 12 months; and what decisions have been reached by the H Cabinet Committee in respect of Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: The proceedings of Cabinet committees are confidential.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister if she will describe the workings of the H Cabinet Committee.

The Prime Minister: No.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Butler: To ask the Prime Minister what increase there has been in the number of nurses and midwives in the National Health Service in the United Kingdom since September 1978.

The Prime Minister: Between September 1978 and September 1987 the total number of nursing and midwifery staff in the United Kingdom has increased by 69,900 wholetime equivalents (16 per cent.).

British Coal (Legal Dispute)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will instruct the relevant Ministers to use their powers to direct British Coal and the South of Scotland Electricity Board not to use public funds to fight a case in the courts and instead to impose a single arbitrator on them whose decision shall be final.

The Prime Minister: Contractual negotiations between electricity generating boards and their fuel suppliers are a matter for their commercial judgment. It would not be appropriate for Government Ministers to intervene.

Department of Social Security Benefit Offices

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister how many visits she has made to local Department of Social Security benefit offices since 1979.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 15 April at column 245.

Homeless People

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she intends to visit those who now sleep on the streets in London and other major cities and towns.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Visits

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what considerations are taken into account in deciding whether she should make visits when no invitations as such have been made.

The Prime Minister: All relevant factors are taken into account when deciding which visits I should undertake.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions her Office has made representations to the media that no publicity should occur when she intends to make visits other than strictly personal engagements; and if she will give details accordingly.

The Prime Minister: My Office makes arrangements for the media as appropriate.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what is her policy on visiting those in hospital who have been injured in major accidents and tragedies; and whether she has made representations to the broadcasting authorities and newspaper that her visits should be made in private.

The Prime Minister: I make a practice of visiting those who have been involved in major accidents and tragedies whenever my programme permits. Arrangements made for the media take into account the views of the hospital authorities and the patients.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Clinical Grading

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nursing, midwifery and health visting staff from each of the old grades have been assimilated to each of the new grades in the recent clinical grading structure in each Northern Ireland health board.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 10 January 1989] The information requested is set out in the following tables which show the position at 31 October 1988. While the numbers and grades are continually changing this is the most up to date information held centrally. The numbers shown on scale G include posts which have been identified but which may not yet have been filled by competition.

Fair Employment Agency

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions the Department of Economic Development has exercised its powers under the Fair Employment Act to require the Fair Employment Agency to supply to his Department information in the agency's possession.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 12 January 1989]: The information cannot be provided without disproportionate cost to the Department.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, in the past 10 years, how many certificates the Secretary of State has issued under section 42 of the Fair Employment Act 1976.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 12 January 1989]: Eighteen certificates have been issued by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland from 1 January 1979 to 31 December 1988.

Employment Statistics

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many employers in Northern Ireland have currently (i) under 10 employees, (ii) between 10 and 25, (iii) between 25 and 250 and (iv) over 250 employees.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 12 January 1989]: At September 1988 approximately 1,140 employers in Northern Ireland employed between 25 and 250 employees and 170 employed more than 250. Information on the number of employers with fewer than 25 employees is not currently available.

Teaching Qualifications

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a list of qualifications to teach which can be obtained in Northern Ireland which will be fully recognised by education authorities in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales.

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to reply.

Such qualifications are not automatically acceptable for qualified teacher status in England and Wales, individual applications from teachers trained in Northern Ireland fall to be considered by my right hon. Friend under paragraph 2*(b)* of schedule 5 to the Education (Teachers) Regulations 1982. Applications are accepted where the course of initial teacher training was comparable to an approved course of initial teacher training for school teachers available in England or Wales at the same time. Qualifications leading to registration as a teacher in Scotland are those recognised by the General Teaching Council for Scotland.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make the necessary arrangements whereby automatic recognition of teachers qualified to teach and recognised as such in Northern Ireland will occur in England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to reply.

I expect shortly to announce details of the proposed reform of qualified teacher status which was the subject of a consultation document issued by my Department in May 1988. When implemented, teachers qualified to teach and recognised as such in Northern Ireland will be eligible for qualified teacher status in England and Wales. Eligibility to teach in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Scottish Consumer Council (Report)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the report made for his Department by the Scottish Consumer Council on the public consultation and decision-making processes associated with forestry development and seabed leases, upon which they consulted Scottish local authorities in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: No such report was made for my Department, although I understand that the Scottish Consumer Council has independently produced a report on how various authorities and organisations thought that communities should be consulted about changes in their local environment and the development of the seabed.

Computers (Japan)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what responsibilities have been undertaken by his Department in the agreement made with authorities in Japan concerned with the Japanese fifth generation computer project.

Mr. Forth: The Department has informed interested companies that the Institute for New Generation Computer Technology (ICOT) has agreed to accept up to two United Kingdom researchers from industry on secondment. Any secondee must be nominated by the Department and be acceptable to ICOT.

Newspapers

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications have been made to acquire newspapers under the terms of the Fair Trading Act 1973 since July 1977; and how many such applications have been refused.

Mr. Maude: Since July 1977 decisions have been taken on 60 applications; 58 consents have been given and, of these, two were given conditionally. Three applications are currently being considered by my Department and one other is with the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

A number of applications have also been received which have been withdrawn before any final decision has been taken. Details of these cases since 1977 are not available.

European Community Structural Funds

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list in the Official Report the occasions when discussions have taken place in the Council of Ministers of the European Economic Community covering the future of its structural funds, the relevant reports made by him to the House, and the likely future timetable of further discussions prior to final adoption of each legislative instrument.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 10 January 1989]: The Foreign Affairs Council discussed the future of the structural fund on the dates listed. My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs reported to the House on those meetings on the dates shown:

Council meetings	Reports to the House	Official Report column numbers
23 to 24 November 1987	25 November 1987	222-224
14 to 15 December 1987	16 December 1987	575
25 January 1988	27 January 1988	240
24 to 25 May 1988	26 May 1988	239-240
13 to 14 June 1988	16 June 1988	217-218
26 September 1988	19 October 1988	876-879
	25 October 1988	158-159
24 to 25 October 1988	27 October 1988	411
21 to 22 November 1988	24 November 1988	11
19 December 1988	21 December 1988	274

In addition, the European Council discussed the subject on 4 to 5 December 1987 and 11 to 12 February 1988. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister reported to the House on those meetings on 8 December 1987 and 15 February 1988 at columns 167-178 and 705-717.

Debates on Community documents about the reform of the funds were held on 18 November 1987 and 21 December 1988 at columns 1090-1162 and 549-570. They were opened by, respectively, my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and me.

Five legislative instruments have now been adopted, and entered into force on 1 January 1989

Council regulation (EC) No. 2052/88 of 24 June 1988

Council regulations (EEC) (not yet numbered) adopted in December 1988 laying down provisions for implementing regulations (EEC) No. 2052/88 as regards:

- coordination of the activities of the different structural funds between themselves and with the operations of the EIB and the other financial instruments,
- the European regional development fund,
- the European social fund,
- the EAGGF guidance section.

No further general legislative instruments on the funds are in prospect, but article 10 of the new regulation on the EAGGF provides that the Council is to decide by 31 December 1989 on the forms of and conditions for the fund contribution to improve the conditions under which agriculture, forestry and fishing products are processed and marketed. The necessary Commission proposals for this have not yet been made.

ENERGY

Neighbourhood Energy Action

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how he proposes to continue support for neighbourhood energy action; and if he expects to reverse the recent decline in the number of local projects;

(2) how many neighbourhood energy action projects were running in September 1988; how many are running now; and what has been the impact on such energy projects as a result of the change from the community programme to the employment training scheme.

Mr. Parkinson: There were some 440 community insulation projects operating on 1 September; on 1 December there were about 300. These numbers are, however, not directly comparable because the transition from community programme to employment training involved a number of projects merging or reforming.

Uptake of places for unemployed people on the projects has been slow under employment training. My Department is therefore in discussion with the Training Agency on initiatives to increase the number of filled places.

Energy Conservation

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what advice is given to housing authorities whose tenants have lost the benefits provided by the former Manpower Services Commission schemes on providing draught-proofing and other energy conservation measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: My energy efficiency office provides a range of advice on how housing authorities can improve the energy efficiency of their dwellings.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make representations to the Soviet authorities making it a condition of the United Kingdom's support for the proposal of a human rights conference in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1989 that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics make a full statement on the fate of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg;

(2) if he will make it his policy to raise the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg at the proposed human rights conference in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1989; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will seek to obtain from the Government of the United States such information as is in their possession about Mr. Raoul Wallenberg; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what information he has of the occasions when the Government of the United States of America raised the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he proposes to raise further the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg at the CSCE; and if he will make a statement;

(6) if he will make further representations to the Government of Sweden offering assistance from Her Majesty's Government in Sweden's efforts to obtain a full statement from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics about the fate of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg; and if he will make a statement;

(7) if he will make representations to the Swedish Government to request that their official publications about Mr. Raoul Wallenberg are translated into the English language; and if he will make a statement.

(8) if he will seek to obtain the hearings and reports from United States House of Representatives on House joint resolution 220 of the 97th Congress, session one; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We fully share the concerns of the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) and the Minister of State my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave). will writing shortly.

Nerve Gas

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the capability of Libya to manufacture sarin nerve gas.

Mr. Eggar: We have firm evidence that the Rabta plant is close to achieving the capability to produce chemical weapon agents including sarin.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent international conference on chemical weapons in Paris.

Mr. Eggar: We played an active part in this conference to which the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), led the United Kingdom delegation.

We particularly welcome the concluding conference declaration which was adopted by consensus by all 149 States participating. It specifically recognises the important and continuing validity of the 1925 Geneva protocol and contains an undertaking by all not to use CW. It also expresses support for the Geneva negotiations for a global ban on CW, and the role of the UN Secretary-General in investigating allegations of use.

The successful outcome of the conference represents a considerable step forward in international efforts to eliminate chemical weapons. We now have to build on this.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service Pensioners Alliance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will (a) authorise the repayment of the £35,000 immediately to the Civil Service Pensioners Alliance and (b) compensate the Civil Service Pensioners Alliance for the outlay it made between receiving the payable order and sending a cheque when asked for its repayment; and why he originally sent this organisation a payable order for £35,000 in respect of funds accrued from the underpayment of Civil Service pensions due to a miscalculation in the retail prices index and then asked for the £35,000 to be refunded.

Mr. Luce: My officials will authorise payment of £35,000 awarded to the Civil Service Pensioners Alliance (CPSA) from the RPI error funds as soon as Parliament approves a supplementary estimate for the funds.

My officials have written to the general secretary of the CPSA to explain and apologise for the delay. The withdrawn payable order was issued in the (mistaken) belief that funds could be authorised in advance of parliamentary approval of a supplementary estimate. I regret the disappointment and inconvenience this may have caused, but I cannot compensate the CPSA for the delay.

HEALTH

Salmonella

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what inquiries have been made to ensure that salmonella pollution has been eliminated in each country exporting food to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: Salmonella contamination is recognised as a world-wide problem and the EC Standing Veterinary Committee decided on 7 December 1988 to set up a working group to consider the problem with the European Community.

The Imported Food Regulations 1984 together with the Food Act 1984 give the responsible authorities adequate powers to prevent the importation of contaminated food into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the level of salmonella infection in current British egg production.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the replies by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) and my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Sir H Miller) on 20 December at columns 246 and 247 respectively.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of (a) outbreaks of salmonella attributable to poultry meat and poultry meat products, (b) people affected in each such outbreak and (c) fatal cases in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of outbreaks of salmonella associated with poultry meat and poultry meat products formally reported to the public health laboratory service in the years 1979-88 are as follows:

England and Wales

Year	Number of outbreaks
1979	[1]55
1980	119
1981	84
1982	49
1983	45
1984	36
1985	21
1986	[2]29

Year	Number of outbreaks
1987	[2]41
1988	[2]34

[1] laboratory reports only.
[2] provisional data.

Information on the numbers of people affected in each outbreak is not readily obtainable.
Some information is available on the number of deaths from salmonella bacteraemia formally reported to the public health laboratory service as follows:

Reports of Salmonella Bacteraemias (England and Wales)

Year	Total Salmonella Bacteraemias (Excluding S Typhi/Paratyphi) Deaths	S Enteritidis Bacteraemia
		Phage Type 4 Deaths	Other Deaths
1983	30	2	3
1984	33	—	3
1985	30	3	2
1986	21	4	1
1987	35	9	6
1988 (to week 43)	48	23	3

Early information is not readily available.
There is no direct evidence to link these deaths with the consumption of poultry, but salmonella enteritidis phage type 4 is associated almost exclusively with poultry and eggs and we must assume that some of the deaths shown in the phage type 4 column will have been associated with poultry.

Water Pollution (Camelford)

Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in providing a small group of independent experts to advise the local health authority on the health consequences of the water pollution in the Camelford area of north Cornwall.

Mr. Freeman: Professor Dame Barbara Clayton from Southampton university medical school, Professor G. A. Rose of the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, Professor J. A. Edwardson of the MRC neurochemical pathology unit, Newcastle, and Professor R. F. Packham from the Water Research Centre and Imperial college, London, have agreed to form an expert advisory group. I am most grateful to Dame Barbara Clayton, who will chair the advisory group, and the other members for undertaking this task at such short notice.

The group, to be known as the Lowermoor incident health advisory group, will advise the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly district health authority on the implications for the health of the population in the Camelford area following the contamination of their drinking water in July 1988. They will start work as soon as possible, and their report will be available to Ministers and made public.

South Western Regional Health Authority

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of Wednesday 14 December, Official Report, column 606, if he will list those private customers other than health authorities within the south-west region to whom fees have been charged for the use of the region's computer centre and the design service in each of the last three years; and what percentage of the total cost of the region's computer centre and design service in each year each represents.

Mr. Mellor: The regional design service has provided services almost entirely for district health authorities in South Western region.

The regional computer centre's sources of income for 1987-88 are shown in the table. In previous years, the amount of income from sources other than districts in south western region were not significant and records were not kept. Details of the centre's customers and of payments made are matters of commercial confidentiality.

1987-88 Income

	per cent.
Districts in South Western region	84·7
Private sector	4·0
Other NHS regions/districts	6·8
Other state funded systems	4·5

Doctors (Working Hours)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state, or estimate, the number of junior hospital doctors in England and Wales and Scotland who are currently contracted to work in excess of 84 hours and 100 hours, respectively, in the course of a working week.

Mr. Mellor: On 30 September 1987, 12,689 junior hospital doctors in England and Wales were contracted to work or be on call for 89 hours or more in the course of a working week. Included in that figure were 2,528 doctors who were contracted to work or be on call in excess of 100 hours. The information relating to Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

In 1985, an independent survey showed that junior doctors actually worked an average of 57 hours a week.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ascertain the number of cases in coroners courts where a contributory cause of death has been found to be tiredness or length of duty of hospital doctors in each of the years 1985-88.

Mr. Mellor: Junior doctors' rotas are determined locally. I would expect local health authorities to investigate fully any case where a coroner's court were to find that a contributory cause of death was one of the factors described by the hon. Member.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secrertary of State for Health what is the average number of hours in any one week required to be worked by a doctor who is working a one in three rota, as envisaged in his letter of recommendation of June 1988 EL(88)P.82 and the likely range of hours worked in any one week.

Mr. Mellor: A doctor who is working a one in three rota will be contracted to work and to be on call on average for a total of 84 hours in a week. The likely range of hours worked in any one week are dictated by local circumstances. They will depend on a number of circumstances including whether the practitioner is contracted for weekend duty in that week. The likely range would be between 40 and 104 hours. Actual weekly hours worked by junior doctors have, on average, fallen from 58·3 to 57 between 1981 and 1985.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the maximum number of hours that can be worked by a junior hospital doctor within a seven-day period and the maximum number of hours that may be worked continuously within the terms of his current recommendations.

Mr. Mellor: We attach great importance to the reduction in hours worked by some junior hospital doctors. Health authorities have been asked to eliminate wherever possible rota commitments worse than one night and one weekend in three. The actual number of hours worked will vary depending upon the speciality and local circumstances.

Locum Doctors

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the reduction in the number of available locum doctors, consequent to his request to district health authorities of 25 November 1988, concerning their terms of employment and remuneration.

Mr. Mellor: Health authorities were advised of the maximum rate they should pay to agencies supplying locum doctors for work in hospitals from 12 December 1988. We have no evidence that the advice has led to any significant reduction in the number of available agency locums; but we are consulting widely on guidance to be issued to health authorities on their employment.

AIDS

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how may Irish citizens are receiving AIDS treatment in the United Kingdom; and what information he has as to why they are not taking this treatment in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Mellor: Such information is not held centrally.

Cigarettes

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give an estimate of the number of cigarettes sold illegally to children, and their estimated current value; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The best available source of information on illegal sales of cigarettes to children comes from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys biennial study of smoking among secondary school children. From the 1986 study it can be estimated that children aged 11 to 15 in England and Wales smoked some 880 million cigarettes costing £66 million at a retail price of £1·50 per pack of 20. Not all of these cigarettes will have been sold illegally as some will have been obtained from other people aged over 16. However, in addition children who did not smoke also reported buying cigarettes and therefore it seems likely that total illegal sales are in excess of the estimates given above. We regard this failure to comply with the law as a serious matter and we are considering how the law might be better enforced. The Tobacco Advisory Council is currently engaged in a campaign to raise awareness of the law and to encourage its observance.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish any evidence that he has on how consumption of cigarettes, particularly by children, is affected by an increase in price; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Evidence from many studies over a long period shows that an increase in the price of cigarettes reduces consumption, with a 1 per cent. increase in price leading to a reduction in consumption of rather less than 1 per cent. There is no evidence available on the effect of price increases on children's smoking in this country, but a study undertaken in the United States suggests that teenagers' smoking is more responsive to price, with a 1 per cent. increase in price leading to a reduction of more than 1 per cent. in consumption. A list of studies and their principal results is as follows.

Percentage Reduction in Consumption of Cigarettes following a One per cent. Increase in Price

Drug Names

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases his Department is aware of where the similarity of some generic drug names have resulted in mistakes with prescriptions.

Mr. Mellor: We do not routinely collect such information. The number of reported serious accidents arising from prescribing mistakes due to apparent confusion over similar names (whether of generic or proprietary medicinal products) is thought to be extremely low—probably not more than one a year on average. Generic medicines marketed in the United Kingdom must be prescribed by their statutory British approved name. These names are devised having regard, among other factors, to the desirability of avoiding confusing similarity with other generic or proprietary names. Lists of names of medicines which look or sound alike are published from time to time in the medical and pharmaceutical press.

Set-aside Agreements

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many set-aside agreements his Department has finalised by county in England and Wales; what is the total hectarage for each county of same taken out of production by such means; and what is his estimate by county of the total cost of this scheme.

Mr. Freeman: I am not aware of such agreements in respect of agricultural land in the ownership of the NHS in England.

Community Care

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many qualified social workers are required to meet the demand for community care; how many qualified social workers there are; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Information is collected centrally only on the number of social workers employed by local authorities. At September 1987 the number in post in England was 24,300. We do not have information available on the number who held a professional qualification. Nor does the information held centrally enable us to identify the number of social workers currently engaged, or likely to be required, on community care work.

Social Work Students

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many students are taking courses leading to the certificate of qualification in social work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I understand from the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work that 4,933 students in England were attending courses leading to the award of the certificate of qualification in social work during the 1987-88 academic year. Of those students, 2,639 had commenced their courses during that year.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many students are taking courses leading to the certificate in social services; what Government help is given to these students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I understand from the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work that 3,401 students in England were participating in schemes leading to the award of the certificate in social services during the 1987-88 academic year. Of those students, 1,325 had joined schemes during that year. These students are staff of local authorities and the costs therefore fall to their employers.

Artificial Colouring

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of children below the age of 16 years who have become ill as a result of artificial colouring in confectionery in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: Information to answer the question is not collected as part of the Department's health statistics system.

Occasionally letters are received in the Department attributing various ill effects in children to consumption of artificial food colouring in confectionery.

British Chicken Bureau

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if any prosecutions have been brought against the British Chicken Bureau under section 8 of the Food Act 1984 in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally.

Private Hospice Patients (Drugs)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements exist for patients in non-National Health Service hospices to obtain necessary drugs under the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 22 December 1988]: General medical practitioners are entitled to prescribe drugs for their patients who have been admitted to independent hospices. This entitlement applies to medical directors of hospices who are also general medical practitioners. In addition, health authorities have discretion to supply drugs to hospices without charge or at reduced rates, or to make financial contributions to the cost of the services they provide. Medical directors of hospices who are also employed by health authorities may, by arrangement with the authorities, prescribe drugs for hospice patients.

We are aware that some hospices find current arrangements insufficiently flexible, and the scope for improvements is under consideration.

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make National Health Service central register records available to the Salvation Army for the forwarding of communications to missing persons on behalf of their families or where other efforts to trace them have failed.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The records held on the National Health Service central register are confidential and it is our policy not to disclose them in the way suggested. However, when organisations such as the Salvation Army ask for communications to be forwarded to a missing person, such a request is treated sympathetically in that the communication is usually passed to the relevant family practitioner committee, whose register contains patients' addresses, for onward transmission if they judge it appropriate to do so.

Elderly People (Residential Homes)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by local authority area the number of approved places in: (a) private, (b) voluntary and (c) local authority residential homes for the elderly, for each year since 1980.

Mr. Freeman: The information readily available over the period relates to the number of places for elderly and younger physically handicapped people in local authorities own homes and places registered in private and voluntary homes under the Registered Homes Act 1984. The information for the years ending 31 March 1981 to 1986 is published in "Residential Accommodation for Elderly and Younger Physically Handicapped People: All Residents in Local Authority, Voluntary and Private Homes Year Ending 31 March 1981 to Year Ending 31 March 1986 England", a copy of which is available in the Library. The provisional information for year ending 31 March 1987 is given in the table.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people had their unemployment benefit stopped because they were considered not to be available for work during the period January to October 1988 in (a) Burnley; (b) Pendle; (c) Hyndburn and (d) Rossendale and Darwen.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that information is not available in respect of the specific localities requested. Statistics on adjudication officers' decisions are not kept below sector level; Blackburn sector adjudication office covers the area specified, in addition to others. Nor do records differentiate between availability decisions reached during the currency of a claim and those that start before any benefit has been paid.

Transitional Payments

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why transitional payments due to Mrs. Rhoda Thompson of 17 Manton avenue, Whinney Banks, Middlesbrough, have not been paid since 31 October 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There was a delay in sending out one payment to Mrs. Thompson. This delay was due to an error on the computer disc which contained the payment details. The error has been rectified and all payments due have been issued.

Industrial Injuries Scheme

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will be involved in the changes of the payment of benefit from the special hardship allowances under the industrial injuries scheme to the new reduced earnings allowance included in the Social Security Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Social Security Act 1988 introduced a new benefit—retirement allowance—to replace reduced earnings allowance (formerly known as special hardship allowance) for those people of pension age who retire on or after 10 April this year. We estimate that between 4,500 and 5,000 beneficiaries will reach pension age each year, and the change will affect them as and when they retire.

Mr. O' Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in full the views of the people who responded to the consultation paper issued in December 1985 on the proposed changes to the industrial injuries scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not our practice to publish the responses made by individuals or organisations to consultation papers. When we announced the changes proposed following this consultation paper, we reported on the balance of respondents' views on each of the proposals.

Family Credit

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families are now receiving family credit; and how many claims are awaiting determination.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the end of December, approximately 255,400 families were receiving family credit. A further 47,800 claims were awaiting determination. Both figures were depressed by a reduction in activity during the latter part of the month.

DEFENCE

Armenia (Relief Supplies)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why Royal Air Force transport aircraft were not made available to facilitate the transportation of relief supplies from the United Kingdom to Armenia following the recent earthquake; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Royal Air Force transport aircraft were available if required, but no formal request for their use was received.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many service men in the armed forces have instituted a complaint of racial discrimination or abuse under (a) the Race Relations Act 1976 and (b) revelant sections of the Service discipline Acts; and if he will publish the details of such cases;

(2) how many service men in the armed forces have instituted a complaint of racial discrimination or abuse under the grievance procedures provided in the Service discipline Acts; and if he will publish the details of such cases.

Mr. Neubert: Section 75(8) of the Race Relations Act 1976 provides that complaints of racial discrimination made by members of the armed forces shall be dealt with in accordance with the provisions for the redress of complaints set out in the service discipline Acts. Submissions for redress of complaint may be dealt with by commanding officers or at any of the higher levels of command up to, and including, the service boards of the Defence Council.

No central records are kept of the total number of submissions made. However, of submissions considered by the service boards since the Race Relations Act 1976 came into force in 1977, none was concerned with alleged racial discrimination or abuse.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on how many occasions since the Race Relations Act 1976 became law has the special investigations branch investigated allegations of racial discrimination or abuse; and if he will publish the details of such cases;

(2) on how many occasions since the Race Relations Act 1968 became law have incidences of racial discrimination or abuse, whether actual, reported or alleged, been brought to the attention of the special investigations branch, senior regimental officers or the authorities of his Department; and if he will publish the details of such cases.

Mr. Neubert: Records are not maintained in a form which enables this information to be provided.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what circumstances led the Commission for Racial Equality to make representations to his Department about ways of dealing with racial discrimination; what has been his Department's reponse to these representations; and what arrangements are in force or planned within the armed services to prevent racial abuse or provocation and to improve awareness of dangers of racial discrimination.

Mr. Neubert: My Department has received no recent representations but has had a number of discussions with the Commission for Racial Equality both directly and in the forum of the Home Secretary's Advisory Council on Race Relations. The CRE has been helpful, for example, in the drafting of terms of reference for a study by independent consultants following the results of the first year of ethnic monitoring of applicants and recruits to the armed forces. The aim of the study, for which invitations to tender have now been issued, is to attract more young people from the ethnic minorities to careers in the armed forces.

Measures to discourage racial discrimination were set out in the memorandum from the Ministry of Defence to the House of Commons Defence Committee which was published in the First Report from the Defence Committee, Session 1987-88 (HC 391) and I refer the right hon. Member to pages 4 to 9 of that report. More recently instructions have been issued to recruiting staff, further Defence Council instructions have been issued and some 65,000 copies of the leaflet "The Armed Forces—Your Rights and Responsibilities" have been distributed, primarily to recruits. This leaflet sets out in summary form the armed forces' policy of equal opportunity and the procedures for any complaints of injustice or ill-treatment.

Rubble Dumping (Pirbright)

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps the Property Services Agency is taking to prevent unauthorised dumping of rubble on Ministry of Defence land in the vicinity of School lane, Pirbright, details of which have been sent to the Department.

Mr. Neubert: I shall write to my right hon. Friend shortly.

Personnel (Duties)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give an estimate (i) as to the numbers of military personnel whose duties include (a) part time and (b) full time, the care of horses owned privately by officers and (ii) the cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Privately owned horses are permitted to be stabled in Army stables only on the basis that there are no additional costs (including manpower costs) to public funds and that their owners meet the costs incurred.

Chieftain Tank Replacement

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, further to his statement on 20 December 1988 on the Chieftain tank replacement, a contract has now been signed with Vickers.

Mr. Sainsbury: Negotiations on the detailed terms and conditions of the contract are in hand and it is hoped that the contract will be signed shortly.

Neutron Beam Detectors

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research is being commissioned in relation to the use of neutron beam detector systems for use in security at Royal Air Force bases; what level of funding is being allocated to this area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: MOD is assisting the Department of Transport in its work aimed at improving airport security. The results of such work could be of benefit to the RAF. I am sure that the hon. Member will appreciate that it would be inadvisable on security grounds to comment on particular technologies.

CINDER (Aldermaston)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will define the role, task and training of CINDER at AWRE, Aldermaston; and if he will make a statement about its composition.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to recent articles in the press about the Government's counter-terrorist arrangements. Contingency plans exist to deal with a number of potential terrorist threats. It would not, however, be in the public interest to discuss specific plans.

SCOTLAND

Teacher Training

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by subject (a) the number of students in Scotland currently enrolled on teacher training courses and (b) the number of available places on teacher training courses in Scotland for the current academic year and the projected number for the forthcoming academic year; and if he will make a statement on any shortfall in particular subject areas of students enrolling for teacher training courses in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend prescribes the overall number of places to be provided for each teacher training course in the colleges of education, but does not determine limits for subject specialism which may be offered within postgraduate secondary courses. The balance of subject specialisms is determined by individual colleges of education in consultation with their local education authorities.

The information requested is set out in the table below. There is no shortfall in the numbers enrolled for this academic session for the primary courses, the post-graduate secondary courses and the bachelor of education in physical education course. Recruitment to the new bachelor of education courses in music and in technology has not matched the places available. A Government publicity leaflet about technology teaching has been sent to every school and further education college, and I understand that access courses for both degrees are being planned.

[1] Figures correct at 17 October 1988.
[2] These figures are at present the subject of consultation.
[3] It is also possible to undertake teacher training as part of an undergraduate degree course at the university of Stirling. By agreement with the University Grants Committee, the university is restricted to producing a maximum of 50 secondary teachers annually.
[4] Entry to these courses began in 1987-88.
[5] The final intake to these courses was in 1986-87.

Loch Katrine

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the fluoride levels both natural and artefact of Loch Katrine water; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The natural fluoride content of Loch Katrine water is negligible and remains consistently below 0·05 milligrammes per litre. The water supply authority does not add fluoride.

Health Service (Grading)

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received recent representations from trades unions regarding nurses' regrading in Lothian's National Health Service hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have received no recent representations from trades unions on this matter.

Football

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list Scottish League clubs together with the following information for each of them during the 1987-88 season: the number of matches played at their grounds, the total season's attendance, the total arrests in association with such matches, the average attendance per match, the average number of arrests per match and the arrests as a proportion of the attendance; and if he will make a statement about the numbers of charges and convictions which have arisen from such arrests.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Attendance figures for season 1987-88 are summarised in the following table. Figures are not collected centrally for European cup ties, friendly matches and regional competitions. The police forces have advised that the total number of arrests within the grounds at these matches was 845. Charges were prepared in all these cases. Information as to whether such charges resulted in criminal convictions is not held centrally.

Community Charge

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the estimated number of second homes liable for the standard community charge by local authority areas.

Mr. Lang: The estimated number of second homes for each district and islands council area as at 30 June 1986 is set out in the following table. The figures have been derived from information supplied by local authorities.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been fined for not registering for the poll tax to date; how many people have been placed on the register despite not having registered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Responsibility for compiling community charges registers rests with individual community charges registration officers and information of the kind requested is not held centrally.

Lockerbie Air Disaster

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the emergency arrangements of British Nuclear Fuels for Chapelcross nuclear power station if the Pan American airliner had crashed there or any part of it had fallen on Chapelcross; what discussions he has had with British Nuclear Fuels following the crash; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: [holding answer 12 January 1989]: The emergency arrangements at Chapelcross are prepared by the operators, British Nuclear Fuels plc, and approved by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate (NII) of the Health and Safety Executive, under the terms of the site licence, on a basis similar to that used at all other civil nuclear power stations in Great Britain. I am advised that the NII regards the probability of a direct strike by an aircraft or significant part of one leading to an uncontrolled release of radiation as extremely low and considers that no change in current emergency arrangements to cater specifically for aircraft crashes would be appropriate.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Co-operatives (Funding)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment further to his reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Knowles) Official Report, 14 December, column 629, how much of the funding made available to the Housing Corporation in the next three years he expects to be spent on housing co-ops, showing separately the amount he expects to be spent on tenant management co-ops and transferred ownership co-ops.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not held by the Department. The Housing Corporation is responsible for allocating its capital programme to housing associations, including housing co-operatives, within the broad framework agreed by my right hon. Friend. I have therefore asked the chairman of the Housing Corporation to respond to the hon. Member direct. The hon. Member may care to note that, with effect from April, the Housing Corporation's responsibilities will relate to associations in England only.

Rating Reform

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what is (a) the amount and (b) the proportion of net income after rebates, adjusted for family size, households' pay in domestic rates in 1988—89, broken down into decile groups; and what is his estimate of what the equivalent figures would be if the community charge was being paid.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The analysis is not available in the form requested.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) by my right hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) on Thursday 12 January 1989, Official Report, columns 742-4. This provides figures by equivalent income bands.

Vocational Skill Training

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange to modify the funding criteria under the urban programme to enable vocational skill training, such as that offered by the Bradford Contact Club, to receive funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No change is required. Schemes to improve the skills and employability of inner city residents are an important part of the urban programme and they will continue to be funded according to the individual merits of each application. Such schemes should be seen as complementary to those administered by the Department of Employment.

Energy Conservation

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice and assistance he offers to housing authorities on energy conservation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The homes insulation scheme, administered by housing authorities and funded by the DOE, provides 90 per cent. grants for loft insulation in qualifying dwellings where householders are recipients of income support, family credit or housing benefit. A DOE booklet for scheme applicants, distributed to all authorities, includes detailed guidance to those who wish to carry out the work themselves.

Estate Action provides advice and financial assistance to local authorities based on the Department's publication "Energy Efficient Renovation of Housing", and research at the Building Research Establishment. In addition advice is available to housing authorities from BRE through its newly launched technical consultancy and through seminars, workshops and its many publications. These include information papers, defect action sheets and digests as well as reports such as the planned design guides on cavity wall insulation and LPS buildings and the BRE video on the remedies for condensation and mould. Housing authorities can also use BREDEM (BRE's domestic energy model) to evaluate all aspects of energy conservation, including insulation, heating, ventilation and the likely behaviour of householders.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has discussed with any local authorities the possibility of alterations in capital spending restrictions following the establishment of a housing action trust in their area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Section 74 of the Housing Act 1988 provides that any money received by an authority following transfer of property to a HAT will be treated as a capital receipt under whatever capital finance system is in place. I have had no discussions with any local authorities about altering this provision.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has had discussions with local authorities other than Leeds, Sunderland, Sandwell, Southwark, Tower Hamlets and Lambeth regarding the establishment of housing action trusts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I discuss all kinds of housing issues which authorities choose to raise when I come in contact with them. And I discussed housing action trusts with representatives of the local authority associations at the Housing Consultative Council on 25 November 1988.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to alter the current criteria for establishment of housing action trusts so that higher quality public sector stock can be included in one.

Mr. Trippier: Section 60 of the Housing Act 1988 lists matters to which the Secretary of State may have regard in deciding whether to include a particular area of land in an order designating a housing action trust area. We have no plans to amend this section.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a decision has been reached on the location of the headquarters of the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Howard: The great majority of National Rivers Authority staff will be based in the regions where the authority's main activities will take place. But we have concluded that, at least for an initial period, the small central policy unit of not more than 60 people should occupy the same London offices as the National Rivers Authority advisory committee. This will ensure continuity between the advisory committee and the NRA itself in the busy period up to vesting and flotation. Other headquarters support functions of the NRA, such as computers, payroll, and information technology work, will be located in the regions from the establishment of the NRA. We shall keep under review the scope for further regionalisation of these London-based staff.

Home Loss Payments

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make an order to increase the level of home loss payments.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales have today laid before Parliament the Home Loss Payments Order 1989, under which a home loss payment will be 10 times the rateable value of the dwelling concerned subject to a minimum of £1,200 and a maximum of £1,500. The order will come into effect on Monday 16 January.

These changes will result in a substantial increase in the average value of home loss payments: at present the minimum payment is £150 and the multiplier is three times rateable value.

This is an interim provision. Further provision will be necessary as a consequence of the abolition of domestic rateable values on 1 April 1990. My Department and the Welsh Office will shortly be publishing a consultation paper on land compensation issues which will refer to this matter.

Rating Reform

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the average community charge would be if it were in place in 1988-89 for income support claimants.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 15 December 1988]: No information is available for income support claimants which enables the hon. Member's question to be answered in the form requested. However, based on data contained in the family expenditure survey and the illustrative community charge figures published on 23 June 1988, I estimate that the average community charge, after rebates, payable by people entitled to income support in England would have been about £1 per week in 1988-89. This assumes that those entitled to claim income support will in fact claim it. This sum would be fully covered by the specific increases in income support to cover community charge payments, which have already been announced.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of places so far filled on employment training schemes in each area manpower board area; what was the target number of places to be filled at this time in each area; and how many of these places in each area were filled by transfers from the community programme.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the number of filled places in each area manpower board area is not readily available but the following table gives this information for each training agency area office area. I am not able to supply information on the Training Agency's estimated profile of filled places as this figure is for internal management purposes only and is not normally published.

I am afraid that I cannot give reliable information on the number of places in each area filled by those people transferring from the community programme. However, in September and October a national total of about 6,000 people transferred from the community programme to employment training, so the numbers in any area are not likely to be large.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria are being used in assessing the quality of employment training programmes.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The criteria used in assessing quality on employment training have been published by the Training Agency in "Achieving Quality—Approved Status Criteria". Copies of the publications for both training managers and training agents have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provision has been made for ensuring the quality of placements with employers sub-contracted by training managers.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 22 December 1988]: All training managers are required to include provisions in their contracts with sub-contractors which require those sub-contractors to meet satisfactory standards. The criteria which a training manager will have to meet to secure approved status includes a number of requirements in relation to the role of the sub-contractors they use. In addition Training Agency staff have right of access to all employment training providers and officials are already monitoring standards including those of subcontractors.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the total percentage of the economically active population employed, in a part-time capacity, in each sector of the economy, set out by age and gender, for the years 1979, 1983 and the latest available date.

Mr. Lee: Estimates from the 1979, 1983 and 1987 labour force survey of employees in part-time employment as a percentage of the economically active in Great Britain, by industry sector, age and sex, are presented in the following table:

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current level of unemployment in the Barnsley, East constituency.

Mr. Lee: The information is in the Library. In November 1988, the latest available date, there were 4,039 unemployed claimants in the Barnsley, East parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people under the age of 21 years are currently unemployed in Barnsley, East.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information, which is also in the Library. Unemployment figures are not available for the requested age group. However, in October 1988, the latest available date, the number of unemployed claimants aged under 20 in the Barnsley, East parliamentary constituency was 433.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Clelland To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the budget for training and enterprise councils would come from (a) Government funds, (b) private sector contributions and (c) others.

Mr. Cope: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) will receive substantial funding from the Government through the Training Agency. They will also be encouraged to stimulte private sector investment in training and enterprise. It is too early to gauge what proportion of TEC's funding will come from non-Government sources.

Training (Agriculture)

Mr. Ron Davies To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many trainees under YTS and ET are currently in training in agriculture.

Mr. Nicholls: At the end of November 1988 there were 427,900 young people in training on YTS. Of these, 18,600 were training in agriculture and related occupations. Information on the number of ET trainees training in agriculture is not available.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Patchett To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people in south Yorkshire are currently on YTS.

Mr. Cope: At 31 December 1988, there were 14,806 young people in training on YTS in south Yorkshire.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Subsidies

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much subsidy has been paid to farmers in the Nottingham, North constituency on each of the categories for which subsidy is available for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None. So far as my Department is aware there are no farms in the Nottingham, North constituency.

Salmonella Enteriditis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the extent of salmonella enteritidis infection in the national laying flock.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The reporting of isolations of salmonella in food producing animals is required under the Zoonoses Order 1975. During 1988 there were 20 reports of the isolation of salmonella enteritidis in commercial table egg producing flocks.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the current level of egg consumption; and what was the level of consumption on 1 December 1988.

Mr. Ryder: Based on reports from retailers, egg packers and producers, I estimate that overall demand for eggs fell below normal levels for the time of year by under 10 per cent. in the week ending 3 December, by about 30 per cent in the week ending 10 December and by about 50 per cent. in the week ending 17 December. I estimate that overall demand is now about 10-20 per cent. below normal levels.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the number of hens still within the laying cycle that have been culled weekly since 1 December 1988; and what is the total number of hens culled for which compensation has been claimed since the inauguration of the scheme to date.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I am aware that producers have been culling hens earlier in the laying cycle, but I have no firm information on the number involved. Culling under the slaughter of hens scheme commenced this week. By Wednesday evening 11 January, 54,000 hens had been slaughtered.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received any representations concerning compensation for laying hens culled before his announcement of the compensation scheme on 19 December.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Yes. Only applications submitted under the scheme, over which proper financial control can be exercised, may be considered for assistance.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many inspections were carried out by his officials of (a) feed processing plants, (b) feed processing plants producing chicken food and (c) egg-producing farms in each of the last five years; how many were found to be sub-standard, for each of the last five years; and how many prosecutions there were for each category in each of the last five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Details of inspections carried out at processing plants producing animal protein for incorporation into animal feedingstuffs, including for chickens, and the samplings found to be salmonella postive over the last five years are as follows:

	Inspections	Number of first and subsequent postive samples
1984	240	80
1985	217	52
1986	122	26
1987	181	26
1988[1]	140	19

[1] Provisional.

If sampling of a plant's production reveals salmonella contamination a notice is served requiring compliance with the bacteriological standard within a time limit. Failure to comply without lawful authority or excuse constitutes an offence. In the cases where resampling still revealed contamination this was not considered to be wilful failure and was therefore not appropriate to bring prosecutions.

Regarding egg producing farms, since there is currently no simple, rapid and sensitive test available for salmonella there is no routine monitoring carried out. However, the recently issued code of practice for commerical layers sets out routine procedures for bacteriological monitoring of birds and hygienic production of eggs.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedures are currently being followed to test for salmonella in the egg-laying flock.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Since there is currently no simple, rapid and sensitive test available for salmonella there is no routine monitoring of laying flocks carried out by officials.

The recently issued code of practice for commerical laying flocks, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House, sets out routine procedures for the bacteriological monitoring of birds and hygienic production of eggs.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether it is his intention to review the specification for salmonella contamination in eggs and poultry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There is no specification for salmonella contamination in eggs and poultry. The reporting of isolations of salmonella in food producing animals is required under the Zoonoses Order 1975.

Marine Fish Farming

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the potential for the expansion of marine fish farming off the coast of England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Ongoing assessments are made of the feasibility of farming species of marine fish and shellfish in the coastal waters of England and Wales. For the foreseeable future, it is likely that salmon, sea-reared trout and certain shellfish will continue to offer the best prospects for commercial development.

Raspberry Flavouring

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish his Department's definitions of (a) raspberry flavour and (b) raspberry flavoured.

Mr. Ryder: "Raspberry flavoured" can be used to describe a food only if its flavour comes wholly or mainly from real raspberries. "Raspberry flavour" may be used if the food tastes of raspberries but the flavour does not come mainly from raspberries. The relevant provisions can be found in schedule 7 of the Food Labelling Regulations 1984 and are explained in our free booklet "Look at the Label".

Food (Water Content)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish a table showing the maximum permitted levels of water that can be added to (a) bread, (b) ham, (c) poultry, (d) bacon and (e) pork.

Mr. Ryder: There are no statutory maximum permitted levels of added water for these products. However, the Food Labelling Regulations 1984 require that where added water comprises more than 5 per cent. of the finished product, water shall be declared in its appropriate place in the list of ingredients given on the label. In addition, the Meat Products and Spreadable Fish Products Regulations 1984 require that any added water in cooked cured meat products (ham) and any added water in excess of 10 per cent. in uncooked cured meat products (bacon) shall be declared on the label in close proximity to the name of the food; this declaration is to be given in multiples of 5 per cent. By virtue of European Community legislation, wet-chilled and dry-chilled frozen chickens may absorb up to 7·4 per cent. and 2·9 per cent. added water respectively before any declaration of added water needs to be made.

Food (Children)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to restrict the use of non-nutritive additives in confectionery and other foods intended for young children.

Mr. Ryder: The Food Advisory Committee is in process of sending me further advice on the use of colouring matter in food in the light of public comments on its published report on this matter. I shall be making an announcement of my conclusions on this in due course. The committee is also currently examining the use of additives in food specially prepared for babies and young children and will report to me when that review is concluded.

Pesticides

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the number of instances of fruit and vegetables polluted by pesticides in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Ryder: As part of the Government's controls on pesticides, samples of a range of foods and agricultural products are monitored for pesticide residues. The results of this monitoring are published periodically in the reports of the working party on pesticide residues. Copies of the reports covering the period 1977 to mid-1985 (food surveillance papers 9 and 16) are available from HMSO. A third report covering the period 1985 to 1988 will be published shortly.

Analytical methods for detecting pesticides are extremely sensitive and small traces can be identified. Such residues as are found in food in the United Kingdom are, in virtually all instances, well below internationally agreed maximum limits, which are themselves designed to incorporate a large margin of safety.

Milk

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the findings of the National Audit Office report on subsidised Common Market milk and milk products; and if he will end the imbalance whereby pupils in independent schools are receiving an average of three times as much subsidised milk as state schools.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Department's accounting officer was examined by the Public Accounts Committee on 7 December 1988 on the Comptroller and Auditor General's report on implementation of the common agricultural policy in Great Britain, and the Ministry now awaits the views of that Committee.

The school milk subsidy scheme makes no distinction between different types of school; it is for each independent school or local education authority to decide whether or not to take advantage of the scheme. Nevertheless, steps have already been taken to identify those local education authority areas where uptake under the scheme is low in order that greater use of the subsidy may be encouraged.

Water

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many occasions since the coming into force of the Water Act 1973, he has issued directions under the provisions of section 5(1) of that Act to water authorities; and for what purpose each such direction was made.

Mr. Ryder: The power has never been used.

TRANSPORT

Gatwick Airport (Night Flying)

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what use has been made of the night-time quota period at Gatwick airport in the summer of the 1988 season, 1 April to 23 October; how many movements were carried out in this period (a) under quota and (b) by dispensation; and whether he will place on record details of the airlines and aircraft type concerned, and the reason for dispensation in each case.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following were the total number of quota movements made by aircraft in each night noise category at Gatwick during the period 1 April 1988 to 23 October 1988. Movement information broken down by aircraft type is not readily available.

	Aircraft night noise category
	NN/A (delayed)	NN/B	NN/C

Usage	57	3,300	1,130

The NN/B and NN/C usage figures include 176 movements unavoidably delayed into the night period because of runway resurfacing works.

The quota movements were used by individual airline operators as follows:

During the course of the last summer season widespread and prolonged air traffic disruption affected operations at the airport. Gatwick Airport Ltd. (GAL) used its powers under the Civil Aviation Act 1982, S78 to disregard 1,581 movements delayed into the night period as a result of this disruption. Dispensations may also be granted for delays to aircraft which are likely to lead to serious congestion at the airport or serious hardship or suffering to passengers or animals. A further 13 dispensations were granted under this category. The numbers of movements disregarded by GAL, grouped by night noise category and airline were as follows:

	Aircraft night noise category

British Rail Rolling Stock

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will request the British Railways Board to ensure that the future withdrawal of older but proven passenger coaching stock from service, other than for reasons of safety, will not prejudice the running of timetabled services to maximum passenger capacity.

Mr. Portillo: The Government have set British Rail standards which cover overcrowding. It is for British Rail to decide how best to meet the quality standards most cost effectively.

Company Cars

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he possesses concerning the current or past estimated proportions of car-miles travelled on roads in Greater London whose costs are met by sources other than the taxed income of the drivers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information in this form is not available. Limited data on car journeys for which employer's assistance was given were included in the Greater London travel survey (1981). The Department has recently commissioned research to provide a better understanding of the nature and extent of travel assistance in the London area.

Greater London (Traffic Management)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what regular meetings take place and at what intervals, between representatives of his Department and those of all London boroughs concerned with traffic management and the avoidance of congestion; if representatives of the Metropolitan police are present; if agendas, minutes, or reports of any such meetings are sent to any elected persons in Greater London; and if he will place any such documents relating to the year 1988 in the Library.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All London borough councils are invited to send an elected member and an official to the annual meeting of the London advisory consultative committee. This meeting provides a forum for all the London local authorities to discuss specific traffic and highway issues of concern to the capital. Representatives of the Metropolitan police are not present at these meetings. An agenda is circulated prior to the meeting and councils are invited to suggest appropriate items for discussion. A note of the meeting is prepared and sent to the borough representatives. I will arrange for a copy of the note of the meeting held on 2 February to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he possesses concerning the incidence of major traffic congestion in Greater London; what information he receives from the Metropolitan police, London Regional Transport, or other statutory bodies or services; and what is the approximate proportion of major incidents of congestion that have as their principal or contributory cause (a) demonstrations, (b) official events, (c) accidents, (d) vehicle breakdowns, (e) roadworks, (f) illegal parking, (g) traffic light failure, and (h) shed loads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Records are not maintained of the incidence and causes of individual traffic jams in London. Day-to-day traffic control is a matter for the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information is available to him, hon. Members and the public, respectively, concerning traffic flows, measured in pcus per hour for varied periods in each day along principal vehicular thoroughfares in Greater London; at how many locations measurements of such flows are regularly made; and what public body is currently responsible for such measurements, and for their collation and publication; (2) what sets of figures or maps are available to him which show the maximum design flow in pcu per hour of each of the major traffic thoroughfares in Greater London, as limited by key intersections; and if he will place any such figures or maps in the Library.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information on design flow held centrally is incomplete and could only be made available at disproportionate cost.

The Department of Transport conducts a range of traffic surveys to monitor road traffic conditions in London, and undertakes analysis and distribution of results. Estimates of vehicle flow are made for each length of major road between intersections and with other class A or motorway standard roads. There are about 1,600 individual links in all.

Summary information in the form of maps for the Strategic London Road Network of trunk and designated roads is published in "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1976-1986" and for major roads in the vicinity of the M25 in "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1977-1987". Copies are in the Library.

Estimates for individual links are based upon a small sample and therefore subject to appreciable margins of error. A standard one-page report is produced for each link, available on request from the Department of Transport, STC5, room A6.29, Romney house, 43 Marsham street, London. A charge is made to cover handling and computer retrieval costs. Where appropriate the results can be provided on microfiche or other media.

The report gives estimates of annual average flows for weekdays between 7 am and 7 pm, weekdays between 6 am and 10 pm, weekdays for the 24-hour day, and for the full week 24-hour day.

Separate estimates of flow are given for pedal cycles, motor cycles, cars, and taxis, buses and coaches, light goods vehicles, heavy goods vehicles, and all motor vehicles. Heavy goods vehicles are further classified as rigids or articulated and by the numbers of axles.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library any map or diagram in his possession which shows the current approximate flows in persons per hour, at the peak evening or morning hour, of all passenger-carrying railways in Greater London, or wider area.

Mr. Portillo: Information of the kind requested will be included in the report of the central London rail study, which is to be published shortly. I will then send the hon. Member a copy.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report a table to show the estimated or actual level of passenger traffic within the Greater London area for each year from 1983 to 1988 which shall include for each year (a) passenger journeys by bus services operated under the auspices of London Regional Transport, (b) passengers carried and passenger miles, respectively, travelled on railways currently operated by London Underground Limited, and (c) the number of passengers arriving and departing at (i) central London stations of the British Railways Board and (ii) through other stations within the Greater London, or similar area.

Mr. Portillo: Estimates are as follows:

Passenger Traffic in Greater London (millions)

	LRT Bus Passenger Journeys[1]	LRT Underground		BR Central Stations[2]
		Passenger Journeys	Passenger Miles	Passengers Arriving	Passengers Departing
1983	1,090	563	2,700	162	157
1984	—	—	—	165	159
1984-85	1,160	672	3,340	—	—
1985	—	—	—	169	166
1985-86	1,153	732	3,710	—	—
1986	—	—	—	180	177
1986-87	1,165	769	3,862	—	—
1987	—	—	—	194	188
1987-88	1,286	798	3,888	—	—

[1] Includes some journeys outside the Greater London area.
[2] Includes some Inter-City passengers.

Further information on passenger traffic in London is given in "Transport Statistics for London" published yesterday. A copy is available in the Library.

Mr. Spearing: To ask th Secretary of State for Transport what information he possesses concerning the current number of (a) work and (b) non-work journeys made on a normal weekday within the Greater London area and the approximate proportion of each made principally by (i) car, (ii) bus or coach and (iii) rail.

Mr. Portillo: Estimates from the 1985-86 national travel survey are as follows:

Average number of journeys made in London on a weekday

	Work Journeys		Non-work Journeys[1]
	Number (millions)	per. cent.	Number (millions)	per. cent.
Car	3·0	42	5·3	35
Bus/Coach	0·7	10	1·6	11
Rail	1·5	22	0·6	4
Walk[2]	1·2	17	7·1	47
Other	0·6	9	0·5	3
Total	7·0	100	15·1	100

[1] Non-work journeys by London residents only.
[2] Excluding walk journeys of less than 50 yards.

Classification Societies

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if any further moves are anticipated to increase the role of classification societies in inspectorate work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The survey and certification of submersible craft and their associated handling systems, and the approval of the intact stability on mobile offshore drilling units, are shortly to be delegated to the classification societies. There are no present plans to increase the role of the classification societies in other statutory surveys, but a review of the working relationship between the Department and the classification societies is being undertaken and when this is completed the possibility of further delegation will be considered. In addition my Department is planning a pilot study to test the possibility of transferring to other organisations some of the work connected with the re-survey of small passenger ships carrying no more than 50 passengers.

Mhari (Sinking)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the sinking of the Mhari following the publication of his inspector's report in December 1985; and whether he will now consider the possibility of raising the wreck for further examination.

Mr. Portillo: Representations have been received from relatives of those lost with this vessel, from hon. Members and from members of the public.

The Department has no responsibility for the removal of wrecks and does not plan to raise that of the Mhari for examination.

UK-Singapore Air Route

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has discussed with British Airways the question of increased capacity on the United Kingdom-Singapore route; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Discussions were held in London this week between United Kingdom and Singapore civil aviation officials on arrangements for the provision of air services between the United Kingdom and Singapore. The discussions made useful progress and they are expected to continue in Singapore within the next two months.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what capital expenditure he expects to be necessary to modify the railway route south of King's Cross, currently used by the Thameslink services, to enable it to carry rolling stock of standard loading gauge to and from the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: Such a proposal would need to be costed by the British Railways Board.

British Rail Engineering Limited

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what decisions have been reached about the sale of British Rail Engineering Limited.

Mr. Portillo: The Railways Board has decided to select a consortium of the management and employees of British Rail Engineering Limited. Trafalgar House plc and Asea Brown Boveri Ltd. as preferred bidder for the purchase of its engineering subsidiary BREL (1988) Ltd. Government consent to the sale will ultimately be required and the British Rail chairman has asked for our agreement in principle to the board's decision. My right hon. Friend is considering this and a statement will be made as soon as possible.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 144

SESSION 1988–89

19th December 1988–13th January 1989

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
